APPENDIX D.

BERRY, ALA., October 5, 1908.

Mr. S. A. KNAPP.

Sin: I have thought that I would rite you for some time, but for neglect have waited to long. I am one of your demonstrators and as true a one as you have. Words can not express my thanks to you for your help and what you have learned me about farming. This year I had I acre, this coming year I ame to put my entire crop in as I did that acre. I am a singlehanded man, no help and renting land. Some say they don't see how I make a living, just me to work and feed two big mules. I tell them that the mules feed themselves and if I make the landowner any money I will make some for me. I think by having an early start that I can get in 8 acres this time, 3 in cotton and 5 in corn. I think I will get 3,000 lbs. of cotton off my acre if it all opens. The seed you furnished me is the finest that I ever saw, me and two other men picked 100 bolls that Triupmh cotton in my acre that weighed 3½ lbs. That beat anything I ever saw. The Triumph cotton has been gined here and found to beat 40 per cent. That is far ahead of anything we have had here before. Anything you will send me will be more than apreciated. When I get any mail from you I dont stop till I read it throe. The farmers are coming more together with your work than anything that ever came along. I think in a few years the farmers will be rite along together. Dont forget me, anything you can due for me I will be glad to get it. The knights are giting long and I would like to read something from you every night.

I will close. Hope you have not wearied over this hard wrote letter. I am your friend,

J. A. KELLER, Berry, Ala.

APPENDIX E.

Extract from a letter of Col. Charles Schuler, commissioner of agriculture, addressed to the farmers of Louisiana December 19, 1908, and published in the Shreveport Times, in which the writer takes strong grounds in the paper of the possibility of raising cotton under boll-weevil conditions. Among other things, he said:

grounds in the paper of the possibility of raising cotton under boll-weevil conditions. Among other things, he said:

EXAMPLE OF DE SOTO.

In my own parish of De Soto diversified farming has proven a marked success. * * Prosperity is returning to both the farmer and merchant, and this can be credited to nothing more than making the farm self-sustaining and to adopting the up-to-date methods of fertilization and cultivation. Two farmers particularly in De Soto Parish may be pointed to as a very successful in the fight against the weevil, Mr. D. J. Bland, of Logansport, and Mr. A. R. Roach, of Mansfield. The former gentleman has averaged 1,000 pounds and over of seed cotton per acre for the past three years, farming on relatively poor, upland soil.

Mr. Roach, at Mansfield, has done equally as well on his upland soil, and has made this year nearly a bale to the acre on bottom land. Mr. Roach frankly says that he has averaged more cotton per acre during the past four years fighting the weevil than he did during the fourteen years preceding 1904 farming on the same land.

Success in fighting the weevil is by no means confined to hill farmers. E. N. Norris, of Grand Bayou, and J. M. Robinson, of Bayou Le Chute, both farming in Red River Valley, made good crops last year.

Even at Bunkie, where the weevils were worse this year than anywhere in the State, R. F. Keary made over 600 pounds of seed cotton to the acre in spite of the weevils and bad weather. It is true that some of his neighbors falled to make a crop, but they did not follow the improved methods advocated by the crop-pest commission and the Department of Agriculture. Porter Fisher, farming at Keachie, after five years' experience with the weevil, says:

"I am just now finding out how to make cotton. You have got to clean up your fields in the fall, plant early varieties, fertilize heavily, and cultivate for all you are worth."

Mr. Fisher this year made 8 bales to the mule on hill land.

Others May Do As Well.

OTHERS MAY DO AS WELL.

OTHERS MAY DO AS WELL.

What these men and others have done can be done by any intelligent farmer who attends to his business as he should. The more provident colored people can do the same thing with proper instruction and encouragement.

Some people hold to the opinion that the negro can not be induced to adopt better methods of cultivation or to diversify successfully, but my own experience with the colored men on my own place at Keachie has been such that I have great hopes for the future of our colored farmers if they be but rightly instructed and encouraged by their white brethren. In February, 1907, I received information from De Soto Parish that there was an exodus of negro laborers from that part of the parish known as "Africa." The laborers were going to Oklahoma, and I was requested to go up and visit that section to see if I could do something to stop it. I went and held a meeting of the heads of negro families at the negro church for a plain, practical, business talk. On a Saturday I met 96 negro men there, and I talked to them for an hour and a half on diversification, more industrious habits, buying less on credit, and explaining to them that the South was the country for them to live in; that they were among friends, etc. I promised them that demonstration farms would be established in their midst and an occasional lecture given to teach them. I wired Doctor Knapp, of the United States Demonstration Farm Work, and had established in the parish of De Soto 240 demonstration farms of from 3 to 5 acres each, with a lecturer to visit these farms as often as it was possible for them to do so.

WAS PERSONALLY INTERESTED.

a lecturer to visit these farms as often as it was possible for them to do so.

WAS PERSONALLY INTERESTED.

I was personally interested in that section, having 800 acres of land there being worked on the tenant system. I had one demonstration farm established on my place under the control of a negro, who owed me $623. I went to Europe in the interest of immigration and did not return to my plantation or parish until the following November. My experience with my tenants was as follows: The negro who owed me $623 paid me every cent of it; had three bales of cotton left over, and had plenty of corn and meat to do him for that year. I supplied him for the year 1908, and his indebtedness at the end of the season was only $32. He has 11 bales of cotton and again had plenty of corn and meat to do him. Another negro owed me over $300 for the year 1907. He paid it all; paid me $80 cash for a mule, had some money left over, and had plenty of corn and meat to do him. One negro who had been working for me sixteen years, and who had never been out of debt before, came out of debt and had some money left over, besides a plentiful supply of corn and good meat. The fact is, every one of my tenants and neighboring negroes in the improvement of the 1008 crop to, first, the talk I gave them, and secondly, to the establishment of the demonstration farms in their midst. It stopped the exodus of negro laborers, and a number are now in a prosperous condition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the methods of growing, harvesting, packing, storing, handling, and shipping fruits, and for experimental shipments of fruits within the United States and to foreign countries, $71,360.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, to insert after the word "fruits," on lines 2 and 3, page 18, the words "and melons."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, lines 2 and 3, after the word "fruits," insert the words and melons."

Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. SCOTT. I accept that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear it read as amended.

The Clerk read the paragraph as amended.
The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, and electric current, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for rent and repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $317,960, of which amount not less than $270,320 shall be allotted for congressional distribution. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixtis of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution among their constituents, or malled by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster-General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Berestantives, and Delegates in Congress remainin

Total for Bureau of Plant Industry, $1,620,736.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert in line 16, page 19, after the word "seventy," the word two," so as to read "$72,320."

Mr. SCOTT. The purpose of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is merely to correct a typographical error.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Forest Service: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $500; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills National Forest in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the district of Alaska in which said forests are respectively situated: Provided, That the exportation of dead and insect-infested timber only from said Black Hills National Forest shall be allowed until such time as the Forester shall certify that the ravages of the destructive insects in said forests are practically checked, but in no case after July I, 1910; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other laber required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests, in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase law books to an amount not exceeding $500, necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington; to pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses; and for rent in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $3,986,000: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the transportation or traveling expenses of any forest officer or agent except he be traveling on business directly, connected with the Forest Service and in furtherance of the works, aims, and objects specified and authorized in and by this appropriation: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for in whole or in part the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons without discrimination, including newspaper and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public.

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. MARTIN rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Martin].
Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether, in his judgment, there is any good reason why this large lump-sum appropriation of nearly $4,000,000, in this paragraph, should not hereafter be classified and apportioned separately as in other appropriation

Mr. SCOTT. I hope there is no reason why it should not hereafter be classified and itemized more closely. It seemed, however, to the committee that it would be impracticable to do it in this bill, for the following reasons: This year there has been a very marked change in the organization of the bureau, by means of which the national forests have been divided into districts and headquarters have been established for each of those districts in the field, so that a very large amount of the work that hitherto has been done in Washington is now done in the headquarters of the various districts.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the gentleman think that if the appropriations for this bureau had been made after the usual method of apportioning the amounts the large number of separate heads of the bureau through different portions of the West would probably have been established at all?

Mr. SCOTT. I have no reason to doubt that the chief of the bureau would have been of the same opinion that he is now, that greater efficiency could be reached through the organization which he has adopted.

Mr. MARTIN. In the manner that the committee has recommended these appropriations is there anything except the opinion of the chief of the bureau to govern how he shall use this

Mr. SCOTT. There is nothing. The question of more closely itemizing this large fund was discussed at length by the committee, and the chief of the bureau was asked to submit an estimate in a different form.

He did this, saying that it was the very best he felt he could do without running great risk of hampering the service, by submitting an estimate, in which he divided the appropriation among the various districts, giving in a lump sum the amount he expected to expend in each of the districts. That did not seem to the committee to be getting any nearer the result it desired than the original proposition. The Forester gave to the committee his assurance, however, that after this new system had been in operation for a year he would be able to, and he would, send an estimate, itemized as the committee de-sired. He thought it was impossible, however, for him to do it now, because the new system has not been tried long enough to enable him to make a reasonable guess as to the manner in which the funds should be assigned.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it the purpose of the committee to here after systematize the appropriations for this bureau as all others under the service?

Mr. SCOTT. It is the decided purpose of the committee

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to the following section, and inquire whether the purposes there enumerated for which this $600,000 additional is added to this general sum are not all subjects that can be covered by the authorizations already given in the previous section. I notice, for example, in the last section: "Erecting necessary buildings;" and further, "to improve the national forests;" and I notice in the following section the general clause "to erect cabins and fences and other permanent improvements, $600,000." Does not that mean to accumulate $600,000 for purposes already covered by the general section?

Mr. SCOTT. Not in the opinion of the committee, and not according to the construction of the bureau. The appropriation for permanent improvements has been carried, I think, for the last three years—the sum fixed the first year being $500,000; last year, $600,000; and for the coming year, as provided in this bill, the same amount; and it has been the construction of the Forester that he is limited in the work of permanent improvements to the amount provided by this paragraph.

Mr. MARTIN. Well, for example, I notice for "necessary buildings" in the main paragraph, and the buildings shall not exceed $500 each. The following paragraph provides $600,000 for general improvements. Certainly that whole $600,000, without any limitation, can be expended in making buildings to cost not exceeding $500 each, can it not?

Mr. SCOTT. I think so, Mr. MARTIN. In other words, it means an added, accumulated appropriation. It can be used for at least some of the purposes already covered by the appropriation of $3,900,000.

Mr. SCOTT. The committee concedes without any cavil the various suggestions the gentleman is making touching the desirability of greater itemization in this appropriation, and if it had seemed possible to secure such an arrangement it would have been done.

Mr. MARTIN. If I have any further time I desire to say that while from the beginning I have been, and still am, enthusiastic for the conservation policy of the Government, particularly as far as it pertains to the proper preservation and utilization of the forests, that the sentiment throughout the West with reference to the way this service is being applied is growing more and more adverse to it.

It is becoming very difficult for the settler; the man who is honestly looking to a particular spot to make his home, containing the proper area where he can settle, is almost sure to find that the ranger desires to select this particular piece as the site of a government cabin. The settlers in a given locality render a great deal of service in the conservation of the forests, for the reason that they are interested in putting out fires on the range. I think it is an extraordinary expenditure of money, without any stipulation as to what manner and for what purposes it is to be used, and the tendency of it frequently is rather to subvert than promote the interests of these great forests, in which we of the West take a lively interest. For one I would like to suggest to the committee the propriety of bringing this bureau as rapidly as possible to that proper administration that applies to the other branches of the public service.

Mr. PARSONS. I understood the gentleman to say that the settlers could render services equal to those of the ranger. Will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. MARTIN. I think my statement will be found not to go to that extent. It is well known to people familiar with the forests, that the settlers in that section are interested as individuals in the preservation of the forests and the prosperity of that locality, and will readily cooperate with the Bureau of Forestry in its efforts to prevent and extinguish fires. They are anxious to promote the well-being of the locality and in a proper and legitimate way to help this service in protecting any of our natural resources.

Mr. MONDELL. I offer the following amendment.

Page 24, line 7, strike out "nine" and insert "four."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I propose reduces the lump sum appropriated for the Forestry Service in the sum of $500,000. The committee increased the very liberal appropriation of last year

Mr. PARSONS. I would like to reserve the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is too late.
Mr. PARSONS. I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. MONDELL. The amendment is not subject to the point of order. As I said, the amendment reduces the lump-sum appropriation by $500,000. The committee has increased the very liberal appropriation—I may say the very extravagant appropriation—carried in the bill last year by $750,000.

In the report of the committee the statement is made that that increase is necessitated by the increased acreage within the reserve, it being stated that 17,000,000 acres have been added to the reserves since last year. Now, the bureau insists that it expends about 9 mills per acre for the administration and care of the reserves; but assuming that 1 cent per acre is to be expended in this way, this additional area would call for an additional appropriation of $170,000, rather than $750,000. However, the very liberal appropriation of last year, taken altogether, amounts to about 2\frac{3}{2} cents per acre. On that basis this increase should be not $750,000, but about $450,000. However, the bureau, in its report—and, I think, the Forester in his statement before the committee—called attention to the well-known fact that territory newly included in reserves is not, during the first year or so, very closely patrolled or as fully and expensively administered as later.

Therefore, assuming that this appropriation ought to be increased at all (and in my opinion it should be decreased a very great deal, in the interest of the purposes for which the re-serves were established), it certainly ought not to be increased over $250,000. Therefore I have presented my amendment.

On yesterday I gave some facts and figures with regard to the extravagant expenditures of this service. I called attention to the fact that, without any specific authority so to do, the service had established six departments or field divisions last year, and, according to the estimates for the coming fiscal year for the maintenance of the headquarters of these six divisions, the cost will amount to $835,360 for purely clerical services, clerks, and assistants connected with these division headquar-The incurrence of this vastly increased appropriation does not bring about any corresponding decrease in the appropriation in Washington; for while the amount estimated for the Washington office last year was $571,000, the amount asked for the Washington office this year is $490,000. So that there is an increase in the field for purely clerical services of over $800,000, and a decrease in Washington of about $80,000; so that in this one bureau, supposed to be established for the protection of the forests and the conservation of the water supplies, the increased cost in one year for purely clerical work is $754,300. As a matter of fact that is what this increased appropriation is needed

Now I think that the expenditures of the Forestry Bureau have been quite extravagant enough in the past. The bureau pays from its lump-sum appropriation more high salaries in proportion to the number of its employees than any bureau of the Government. It is notorious in the region in which these reserves are located that high-priced men in great numbers are constantly going over the reserves to investigate this, that, and the other condition, or alleged condition; that a large portion of the time of these scientific gentlemen is, consumed in attending meetings and in furthering the very elaborate propaganda of this bureau, carried on for the purpose of strengthening its hold among people who are acquainted with the character of the work which it is actually performing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we went quite far enough last year in increasing the appropriation, and in adding to the lump-sum appropriation $600,000 for permanent improvements, and that we shall be treating the bureau not only fairly but liberally if we give them an increase, not of $750,000, but $250,000.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman contend that the administrative districts that were established are against efficiency, or in the direction of efficiency?

Mr. MONDELL. In my remarks yesterday I said I did not pretend to pass on that question. I am inclined to think that it might be well for the Forestry Service to do as the Land Office does, establish administrative districts, with modest and reasonable headquarters, costing three or four thousand dollars a year each to maintain, through which certain reports may be transmitted to the central office at Washington, and where certain questions may be settled without reference to the Washington office.

I am not certain as to that, but when the bureau establishes six districts, that cost all the way from $144,000 to $147,000 each per annum for clerical services alone, we are not surprised that they are asking for $35,000 worth of typewriters for the coming fiscal year to keep this force busy.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for another ques-

Mr. MONDELL. I will. Mr. PARSONS. Is not it necessary in establishing the administrative districts to send the records to those districts and keep the records there?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman wants to know the opinion of the gentleman from Wyoming on that subject, I will be frank about it. My opinion is this: These expensive administrative districts were largely established for the purpose of stemming the tide of popular opposition to certain policies of the department in the region in which it operates. That is my opinion.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman answer the question whether it is not necessary to send out there to each administrative districts these records?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think of any special records that would be needed. The maps of the reserves are printed in duplicate. It would not be expensive to send those out there. The gentleman recalls that in the matter of land titles the Agricultural Department must yield to the Interior Department, and therefore the questions relating to patents and to rights of way in the nature of easements must be referred to the Interior Department, and all land plats are in the Interior Department and not in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. PARSONS. What are the records that the Bureau of Forestry keeps

Mr. MONDELL. I am not fully informed on that subject. I presume they have some records.

Mr. PARSONS. They have records in regard to permits? Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it would cost $147,000 to send the records to Missoula, and it would cost $141,000 to amount to keep the men to look after them.

Mr. PARSONS. How many permits are granted in the Missoula district a year?

Mr. MONDELLI. Oh, a few thousand; and the gentleman from New York, if he was running the reserves, could issue all the permits that are issued all over the United States and he would not be near as busy as he is now. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARSONS. I want to say that I visited a forest reserve in the gentleman's State, and I was very much impressed with the work they were doing.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, they do some good work. Spending the money they do, it would be strange if they did not.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this matter has been very thoroughly discussed, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close on this amendment in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it is true, as the gentleman from Wyoming has suggested, that one reason given for the increase in the appropriation for the forest reserves allowed in this bill is the extension of the area of the forests, but that is not the only reason. Additional reasons, and very strong ones, are found in the tremendous increase in the use of the forests. As I stated in my opening address yesterday:

The books of the Forest Service show that last year the number of timber sales increased 206 per cent, the amount of timber cut 102 per cent, free-use permits 176 per cent, and the number of special permits 67 per cent, while the sales and fees received increased 20 per cent. Summing it all up, the total increase in the amount of business done was 46 per cent.

Obviously a very large increase in the use of the forests demands an increase in the forest force, and an increase in the forest force calls for an increase in the appropriation to pay that force, just as an increase in the business of a merchant, in the number of customers coming into his store, calls for an addition to the number of clerks.

But not only has the use of the forests increased, but it is hoped through this new arrangement to facilitate the transaction of business for the benefit of those who use them.

If I mistake not, one of the complaints of the gentleman from Wyoming, as voiced in this Chamber heretofore, has been the tedious delay in the transaction of business brought before the Forestry-Service. One of the first purposes sought to be gained by the new system, whereby the forests are divided into districts and headquarters are established in the field, is to facilitate the transaction of business so that hereafter there will be no occasion for such complaint.

I can not acquiesce in the statement that the bureau is administered with wanton and reckless extravagance. It was found by the Keep Commission, which investigated the departments two or three years ago, that the average salary paid to employees in the Forestry Service was less than was paid to the employees of other departments of the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.
Mr. MONDELL. Is not that due to the fact that the men who actually do the work in the Forestry Service, the rangers, receive very low salaries; but is not my statement a moment ago also true, that there are more very high salaries in this bureau in proportion than in any other?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the rangers are paid salaries which are adequate or it would be impossible to supply the places, and I take it that the salaries paid to other officials are such as similar services could command in other employment.

Mr. LAMB. I will state that the average salary is $900.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. The average salary paid professional employees, I am reminded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Parsons], is about $1,500 a year, and I know of a number of cases in which some of the highest-salaried employees of this bureau have left this service in order to go into private employment, where they could be paid a larger salary. It must be understood that the men who are charged with the large responsibility of conducting timber sales involving many hundreds, and sometimes many thousands, of dollars, must be high-grade men. They must be expert, skilled men in the timber and lumber business, and such men can not be employed for a paltry sum.

It seems to me that the committee has not erred on the side of extravagance in recommending an increase of $750,000. The only question we had in our minds was whether we had recommended enough. The Secretary's estimate asked for an increase of $2,100,000, and we thought when we were cutting it down to $750,000 we were possibly making a mistake on the side of economy, because there are chances that too great economy in this service may prove to be wasteful extravagance. I pointed out in my opening address the other day that by virtue of the work done in this service there was saved during the past season alone forests to the amount of $34,000,000 from losses by fire, estimating losses which would have occurred without forest protection by those which did occur in the privately owned

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not care to continue it.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mondell) there were—ayes 15, noes 47. So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

Improvement of the national forests: There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $600,000, to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other permanent improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. As I understand the present administration of forest reserves, it is like a large business, carried on by the Government, and growing more so all the time; that is, the Government is the landlord of an enormous domain, which it rents out for forest purposes, and carries on in that way a business of forestry, grazing, stumpage, selling timber, and the like.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That being so, is it contemplated by the committee and by the Government generally to continue this for an indefinite term of years, and to keep control of these forests and to carry on this business, the renting out of land, of water power, and selling timber?

Mr. SCOTT. It is the policy to hold possession perpetually of these national forests, partly to guard against the timber famine which is threatened for the future, partly to protect stream flow, according to the judgment of the Chief Forester, and for other important public purposes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then, is it not expected soon, or at least ultimately, that this business, which is nothing more or less than a large commercial business, shall become self-sustaining?

Mr. SCOTT. That is the expectation. The chief forester told the committee this year that he thought next year's receipts would approach $3,000,000. The receipts last year were about $1,880,000, and they will be about $2,000,000 this year.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What were the total appropriations last year for the purpose, and this year?

Mr. SCOTT. The total appropriations last year were something over $3,000,000. I can give the figures exactly if the gentleman desires.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think it will be wise to give them.

Mr. SCOTT. The total for the Forest Service during the current year is $3,896,200.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And the receipts?

Mr. SCOTT. The receipts for this year it is estimated will be something over $2,000,000, so that as a matter of fact the actual net cost to the country of this service is about a million and a half dollars, but for that million and a half dollars we get fire protection worth many times that amount. We also get all the study and research and investigation, and a great many other important things.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Now, am I right in supposing that the receipts from all sources connected with forest exploitation by the Government are covered into the Treasury?

Mr. SCOTT. Those receipts are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And we make appropriations out of the Treasury

Mr. SCOTT. And they are used for appropriations just as receipts from the post-office or any other source of public revenue.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Thank you very much. Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor, suppose, in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of California. I desire to say a word on the subject that has just been before us, the matter of the revenues of the forestry department. I characterize it as the greatest outrage that has ever been perpetrated by this Government on any portion of its people. The effort of the forestry department is to grind every dollar that it can get out of the people of the West, and there is no kind of activity carried on in any part of the national forest that is not made to yield money, money, money all the time to the Federal Government. It is written in the law for instance, and in the original act establishing the "forest reserves," as they were then called, that mining should proceed without interruption and be in no way affected by the forestry law, and yet you can not touch a mining proposition within a national forest that the hand of the department is not laid upon your shoulder at once and a fee extorted for the benefit of the National Treasury.

Now, let me give you a specific illustration: A year or two ago a friend of mine, living in my own county, desired to construct a small quartz mill, what we call in the West a "Huntington quartz mill." He started in, as he assumed he had the right to do, to erect it, and being within the limits of a national forest he was proceeding with his work when the forest ranger laid his hand on his shoulder and said: "You can not build a quartz mill in the forest without a permit." And in the course of a year and a half he got his permit upon the condition that he would pay into the Federal Treasury $50 a year. Now, there is not one syllable of law that justifies the payment of $50 or 50 cents for a privilege of that kind. And speaking of this matter of privileges, it was stated here yesterday that one of the shining glories of the Forestry Service is that 200,000 permits had been issued in the past year. That means exactly 200,000 interferences with the daily affairs of the farmers and the miners and the stockmen of the West, and a very large per cent of those permits were at the price of a fee which they were obliged to pay into the Federal Treasury without one syllable of authority in law which justified it, and nothing but the greed and the grinding policy of this department of the Government. will sustain them in bringing it to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And if my friend will permit me an interruption, is not that also true as to the men who, in good faith, attempt to settle on the forest reserves as homesteaders?

Mr. SMITH of California. It is true as to everything that is undertaken in the forest reserve. Now, I want to give another case that came within my knowledge last fall: When I was going from one town to another during the campaign, a gentleman came in the train and sat down beside me and we engaged in conversation. I soon discovered he did not know who I was and what my connection with the forestry department or the Government was. He said he was a bee man, and up the road a way he was going to leave the train and go back to a mountain canyon, where he had a few stands of bees feeding on the bloom of the sage and the tar weed, and those indigenous plants. The forestry department, he said, had laid its hand upon his shoulder and demanded that he pay a tax of 10 cents a hive.

Now, the bee men in the West are among the poorest people.

They go into that occupation because they have not the money to engage in farming or in any other general occupation, and every penny which the forest department extorted from that man was the loss of a comfort, yes, a necessity, to his family. It represented some deprivation of some little boy or girl or the hard-working and industrious wife in that man's family. There is neither in sense nor in law any justification for filching these pennies from the pockets of that poor bee man. Now, I speak with some interest and some zeal

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks that he may have five minutes more time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of California. I speak with some energy and zeal on this, because I plainly foresee that unless a halt is called in this grinding of the people in their everyday affairs there is going to be a reaction and the entire forestry system may be destroyed, and that would be a great calamity. If the Forestry Service will confine itself to its proper functions, it is one of the great institutions of this Government and will result in great good. Not that they are going to enlarge the timber supply extensively, for they are not-that is the biggest humbug in the world—but it is going to conserve the ranges, it is going to benefit the stream flow, and to some extent it will result in reforestation where timber is milled off properly.

I want to say to you, gentlemen, if you have any idea that great and glorious forests are going to be spread over the country which is now designated on the map-and always in green, I believe—as a forest reserve, you are doomed to great disappointment.

The thing that the West needs, industrially, and I refer to the conservation of the timber, the water, and the feed, is rest. Leave it alone and give it the least administration possible, and nature will give you the result. It is largely impractical to set trees out over the forest reserves. A large portion of them are as destitute of timber growth as the roof of this building, be-cause nature never intended that trees should grow where the granite and rock are as near the surface as they are, and where the rainfall is as little. We have all seen certain photographs printed again, and again, and again. All the picture papers in the country and all the magazines and many of the daily papers have printed a picture of a mountain side that seems to be en-tirely bare, as if the soil and all had slid into the canyon below. That is held up to us as an illustration of the great iniquity that has resulted in this country because there was not a Chief Forester born some generations earlier.

I can show you a forest reserve in my district where for miles and miles there is nothing to be seen but that stony, rocky mountain side, and if there ever was a forest there it disappeared before Adam was born. It was a natural condition, and has no more business to be in a forest reserve, except for the purpose of making places in which to spend money and provide for the activities of that department, than there would be for putting this building into a forest reserve for the purpose of growing a forest all over it.

Mr. PARSONS. Why does the gentleman make that com-plaint when he says that one of the good results of the Forestry Service would be the improvement of the range?

Mr. SMITH of California. I say that there is neither range, timber, nor anything else on the forest reserve I just spoke of. In the county in which I live the forest reserve is extended out onto the floor of the Mohave Desert, where you can not grow a single thing but lizards. [Laughter.] Nobody undertakes to grow anything there, and a man would be sent to the insane asylum if he would undertake to raise a forest on such land

The activities of the Forestry Service have gone too far in two particulars; first, as I say, in meddling with the everyday activities of the people that live anywhere near it; and, second, spreading the boundaries of the forests over a vast amount of territory that is in no sense forest, in no sense contains a water supply, and is in no sense responsive to any of the legitimate purposes of the Forestry Department.

I wish that department would do two things. First, I wish it would get off of the backs of the people who live in the vicinity of the mountains—in the foothills, where a large majority of the land has passed into private ownership; and, second, I wish it would withdraw its limits from that country which can never be forest, and where there is no water to conserve, and concentrate its efforts on those watersheds well up in the mountains, above settlements, where timber to some extent may be grown, where the range needs some attention, and where there is a chance to conserve the water for irrigation below and to prevent floods from the storms that prevail in those watershed districts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. PARSONS. I ask that the gentleman be given five min-

Mr. SCOTT. I object.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given two minutes more.

Mr. SCOTT. I object.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to continue for two minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. POLLARD. I object.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire most heartily to concur in what the gentleman from California said in regard to the conditions in his State. Similar conditions exist in the State of Colorado. I will say, gentlemen of the committee, that the prospecting for minerals in my State has almost entirely ceased. Why? On account of the arbitrary action of Mr. Pinchot's bureau. I brought out in the hearings before our Committee on Agriculture from Mr. Pinchot that he was charging the people of my State $5 per thousand feet for timber worth half the price; that he charges the people of California, Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Utah $1.90 per thousand feet. When I asked Mr. Pinchot for his authority, he said:

By authority of the Attorney-General of the United States.

Now, gentlemen, what we want in the Forestry Bureau is a little more practicability and less sentiment. The statement was made by the chairman of our committee [Mr. Scorr], on the statement made to him by Mr. Pinchot, that the receipts for the coming fiscal year would amount to the sum of $3,000,000. I deny the correctness of that statement. It is well known to all through the forestry regions of this country that to-day the receipts are largely falling off on account of the sale of timber; also the receipts from grazing horses, cattle, and sheep on forest ranges.

Now, gentlemen, I desire to say for your information, with the people of my State, at the last election the question of Judge Taft's and Mr. Bryan's election was not the issue. I want to say in this connection that at no time was I a candidate myself for reelection as Member of this honorable body, but Mr. Pinchot and Pinchotism was one of the issues in my State, and the result was the State went Democratic. [Great laughter.

Mr. LAMB. Will that be a national calamity? [Laughter.]
Mr. COOK of Colorado. With all due respect to my comrade, Colonel LAMB, I rather think it was, in some respects, in our State. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen of the committee, what we want to-day in my State is to carry out the law. We do not want the Chief Forester in Washington here to get to the members of the committee and by misrepresentations have them vote money to enable Pinchot to put 1,400 more employees to work, build up a political machine, and spend hundreds and thousands of the people's money and accomplish no results, when his object, as is well known, is to get Mr. Wilson's position in the Cabinet as Secretary of Agriculture. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph last read, appropriating $600,000 for so-called "permanent improvements" in the forest reserves. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact, already called to their attention by the gentleman from South Dakota, that the improvements proposed under this paragraph can all be carried out under the lump-sum appropriation. This paragraph contains no authorization not contained in the former paragraph. This paragraph is simply an excuse for getting more money. Now, one or two gentlemen have suggested to me that it is strange that one should object to appropriations for improvements within the territory I represent. I object to these improvements because they are unnecessary, because they are extravagantly carried on, because unnecessary improvements on our forest reserves mean an ultimate toll.

The gentleman from Ohio made inquiry a moment ago of the chairman of the committee as to how soon we could expect returns from the forest reserves to equal the expenditures. I think that it is the intention of the Forestry Service within a very short time, if possible, to secure an income much in excess of the outlay. However, that never can be done, no matter how rapidly they sell their timber, if the expenditures are to increase as they have increased in the past few years. I called attention yesterday to the fact that in my State there is one reserve on which the timber is now being cut so rapidly that in ten years there will be practically no standing mature timber on that great reservation. It will require from one hundred to one hundred and fifty years to grow another crop.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman name the reservation to

Mr. MONDELL. When the gentleman asks me to give the name I am embarrassed, for the reason that we have a peculiar condition in the West. It is as though in Illinois and Missouri you should have the names of your counties changed every time the county clerk had a bad spell of indigestion or had the notion strike him that he wanted to name something

Mr. SCOTT. Perhaps the gentleman will give us the present

Mr. MONDELL. This reservation was known as "Medicine Bow Reserve." The Medicine Bow Range is known throughout the West. It is a majestic, towering, snow-capped range, familiar to all travelers and dwellers in that region for many years by that name, but somebody in the Forestry Service, just to show that he had the power to do so, I suppose, rechristened it.

Day before yesterday I think they called it the "Cheyenne Reserve." To-morrow it may be something else. But we will call it the "Medicine Bow." In ten years, at the present rate of cutting, there will be no considerable amount of large timber on the Medicine Bow, and then there will be at least one hundred and fifty years during which there can be no considerable receipts from timber; but the Forestry Service are forehanded, never forget that. They are laying the foundation for a continual revenue. Last year I called attention to the fact that 500 revocable permits had been issued in the forest reserves of the country for purposes for which the Congress of the United States had given the applicants an easement, and these revocable permits were forced upon these applicants through various procedures of delay and suggestion and intimidation, laying 500 different bases for the collection of a perpetual toll.

The Forestry Service, instead of confining itself to the purposes for which it was created, is attempting to establish over great areas within the Western States federal districts within which the Federal Government shall lay a tax on every industry, within which no man shall operate except he shall pay to the federal taxgatherer. The system is un-American. It is a system that no American Commonwealth will long tolerate.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman contend that when a man gets a permit for mining in a forest reserve he should pay nothing for the permit?

Mr. MONDELL. I say that since the beginning of the Government we have allowed prospectors to go on the public domain and prospect, we have invited them to do that, and the result has been marvelous development. The law gives them the same right now in the reserves, but the department, unfortunately, is higher and mightier than the law.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman mean to say that the department denies to any man the right to go upon the reserve for the purpose of prospecting?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman desires to be fair.

Mr. SCOTT. I know he does. That is the reason I ask the

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand that the bureau denies the right; it often surrounds the right with so many conditions, with so much red tape, with so much inquiry, with so many conditions as to the use of timber for the building of the prospector's little shack to shelter him while he is carrying on his prospecting work; it so very carefully investigates the question as to whether he has mineral enough that he can afford to pay the Government's price for the land and continue to mine; it surrounds him with so many conditions practically impossible of fulfillment, that the result is that the miner, like the home-steader has ceased to seek the mountains. The homesteader steader, has ceased to seek the mountains. The homesteader has learned, as the gentleman from South Dakota has just stated, to shun the forest-reserve region.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. HASKINS. I object.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word on this question. I had not intended to take any of the time of the committee, but there have been so many misstatements made, and so many statements which will give a wrong impression to the members of the committee, that I want to correct at least two or three of them.

We have 169,000,000 acres set aside in the forestry reserves. They belong to all the people of this country. They belong to the constituents of every Member upon this floor. They do not belong to the people of the States where they are located, but they belong to all the people. The difficulty with these gentlemen is that their constituents in the past have been in the habit of going onto these reserves and removing timber when-ever they saw fit, without paying anything for it. They have been in the habit of grazing their herds on these grazing lands and not paying for it. The gentleman from California says the people in that country are being imposed upon to supply a fund for the National Treasury. The proceeds from grazing and from timber are divided in two parts. One-quarter of the receipts go to the people of the State where the receipts are obtained and three-quarters go into the Treasury as a general

Now, as a matter of fact, there is probably not a single place in the Rocky Mountain section where the Government is charging for stumpage the price that private owners are obtaining for stumpage alongside it. There is not a single place in the Rocky Mountain section where the Government is charging for grazing the price that private owners are charging for grazing, or which the Indian Bureau of our own Government is obtaining for grazing.

We are receiving from this grazing privilege something like 00,000 a year. If we received for the same service what $800,000 a year. would be charged by private owners, or what would be received by the Indian Bureau of our own Government, it would amount to something like $2,500,000.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, there is not, in my judgment, a single instance where any charge whatever has been made to any man for taking up or prospecting any mining claim on a government national reserve. The instructions which are given to the range men and the supervisors, which are in print, a copy of which any Member of the House can obtain if he will take the trouble, explicitly instruct the range men to encourage prospectors, and expressly stipulate that no charge whatever shall be made to the prospector on a government reserve.

Mr. MONDELL rose

Mr. WEEKS. I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming. Mr. MONDELL. Did I understand the gentleman to state that the Government had in no instance charged more for stumpage than is charged by private owners?

I have not been able to find an instance. Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. MONDELL. I gave one instance, and had I time I could give a dozen of which I have knowledge where the Government is charging $5 for stumpage, when a few miles, or perhaps a considerable distance, in the same general region, private parties are selling for a dollar or a dollar and a half.

Mr. WEEKS. Conditions may have been different. I was informed yesterday by a large timber owner who lives at Colorado Springs that he was obtaining $5 a thousand stumpage for his timber and the Government was selling right alongside, under the same conditions, for $4.

If gentlemen will take the trouble to look up the hearings before the Agricultural Committee, they will find that only about one-third is being charged by the Government for grazing privileges on national reserves that is being charged by private owners in private localities under the same conditions.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEEKS. I will. Mr. COOK of Colorado. The gentleman from Massachusetts stated that in Colorado a less price was being charged by the Government than was being charged by private individuals for stumpage. I will ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that more than 92 per cent of the timber lands in Colorado are in forest reserves?

Mr. WEEKS. I did not mean to say that the charges in one locality are the same that they are in another locality. Charges for stumpage should depend on location, on transportation, and all other incidents that go to make up a proper price.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Where did the gentleman get the figures about the price for grazing purposes?

Mr. WEEKS. Largely from the testimony that was submitted to the Committee on Agriculture at the hearings held before this bill was presented.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How could there be similar conditions in the public grazing lands and those owned by private persons, so that you could make a comparison?

Mr. WEEKS. Comparison was made in several cases, and any examination will show that my statement is correct.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. I desire to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts

Mr. WEEKS. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. SMITH of California. Is it not true that the lands privately owned are uniformly the best, and therefore there can be no just comparison?

Mr. WEEKS. I will state that my informant told me the conditions were the same, including the cost of transportation, and that he was obtaining $5 for stumpage where the Government was selling for $4.

Mr. SMITH of California. My question related to the grazing

Mr. COOK of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEEKS.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. Where are the best timber lands that the gentleman speaks of near Colorado Springs?

Mr. WEEKS. I understood they were near Colorado Springs.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. There are no timber lands near Colorado Springs. Their supply of lumber comes from New Mexico, Texas, Oregon, and Washington.

I did not intend to locate them at any particular Mr. WEEKS. The information was given me by the predecessor of the gentleman who has just spoken, and any Member who served with him will believe his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been thoroughly thrashed out this year and last year, and I therefore move that debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I hope that motion will not prevail. This is a new problem, not understood in its workings by eastern Members. I move to amend by making it fifteen minutes.

The question is on the amendment of the The CHAIRMAN.

gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The motion now is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would not be understood as making a harsh statement, especially about my friends who represent the Territories in which these forest reservations are, but I take it that as a matter of fact for many years it has so become the custom to loot the public domain that when the Government endeavors to come into its own it looks to them like For years they cut the forests without paying for it, they herded their stock upon the grazing land without paying for it, and when in course of time the Government wishes to preserve its own, they complain. When I first came into this House the complaint was that the Forestry Service would not administer the national forest reserve with a businesslike administration. The complaint was that there would be no economy in the management of the forest reserves, and now their complaint is that there is too much of a businesslike ad-

Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to defend Mr. Pinchot on the floor of this House against the assaults which have been made upon him. His work will speak for all time. He has, with the help of other great men of the country, inaugurated a system in this country of inestimable value to future generations. [Applause.] This year, Mr. Chairman, it so happened that I traveled for more than a hundred miles through burning forest fires. I tramped for long distances through the forest in search of some information upon this subject connected with the special committee of which I am a member. The great need of the country, so far as forests are concerned, is, first, fire protection. In Minnesota, in Wisconsin, in Michigan, millions of dollars of property were destroyed for lack of fire protection, and you might just as well expect that a man will preserve his home in this city from fire without a paid fire department as to expect that the forests of the country will be preserved from fire without governmental aid of some kind. [Applause.] Under the regulations and the control of this Forestry Service, our forests, the Government's forests, worth hundreds of millions of dollars, probably a billion or two of dollars, have gone through the past dry season with scarcely a stick destroyed by fire. Wherever a fire started there were the servants of the Government to put it out, but where it started on the private property of the people there it burned, as I know myself. Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen are working against the inevitable. We will continue in our country to have the forest reserves. We will attempt to administer them properly with businesslike methods, and in the end the people who come after the distinguished gentlemen now occupying the floor of this House will thank their Lord that we and not they prevailed in the policies of our country. [Applause.]

by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This discussion generally comes around to a certain stage of misrepresentation, not intentional on any-one's part, when the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture moves to close the debate. I criticise him to that extent and proceed with my remarks. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] endeavors to create the impression in the minds of the House and the country that the Members from the West are opposed to the forestry department and to the system. I positively and emphatically deny that that is true. There are no stancher friends of the Forestry Service, within reasonable limits and for the purpose of preserving and conserving the natural resources of the country in the West, than are the people of my district. I would go as far as the gentleman from Illinois or any gentleman from any timber country in the pres ervation of the forests and in the care of the public property of

But I insist that it is not a fair deal, when all of the East and the Middle West have had all of the bounties of nature free, that we who are now struggling with the rockiest proposithat has been presented in the country should be burdened by a system of taxation that reaches into the pockets of every man who dares go upon the public domain.

We are in favor of the Forestry Service. We want the tim-ber preserved, and we do not care to steal any more of it, as the gentleman intimates we have been doing. The law gives to every man living on the forest reserve or in its vicinity free wood for his fuel, and it is not a fair statement to say that the people of the West have been petty larcenists for all of the years past.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has endeavored to make some statements, and has made them, with reference to prices. I say the policy of the Forestry Department is franklyhave it in writing from the Chief Forester-to get the last living cent out of whatever it disposes of. A miner a year or two ago wrote to me because the price of timber for his mine had been raised from $2.50 to $4 a thousand stumpage, and he wanted it reduced.

I wrote to the Forester, and he gave me this reply: That it had been raised to $4 a thousand because they found that the man could not get it anywhere else for any less. On another occasion I went with some mining men from my district to meet Mr. Pinchot when he was in Sacramento at the Irrigation Congress a year ago; the miners were asking about some stumpage near their mine, which was remote from a railroad point. He said to them the price of the stumpage would be the price of the lumber at the nearest railroad station, plus the price of hauling it to the mine. Now, that is business; that is the way individuals do business. We take what the traffic will bear; we exact from our neighbors the highest price we can get. But I assert, Mr. Chairman, as positively as I can, that that has never been the policy of the United States Government, and it is a vicious policy for any government to invoke against its people.

Mr. PARSONS. What should be done? Mr. SMITH of California. I am going to state. The Government of the United States is a government and not a business institution, and it has no more business to go among the people and drive hard bargains, especially at this time in our history, than it has to drive people from their homes. The policy of The policy of this Government, from the beginning until within the last five years, has been to pass over the natural resources of the country to the individual and let him have the increment, thereby strengthening himself; and never until within the last few years has the United States Government been a money-making institution in any of its departments.

Mr. PARSONS. To whom is it to be given? Mr. SMITH of California. Give it to the man who will appropriate it to a useful purpose, exactly as we give to the man who sails a ship the free use of the harbor on which we have spent millions in its improvement. Now, I say this is a fundamental question. It is a question that goes to the policy of the Are we going to turn this great Republic into a finan-Nation. cial institution, grinding from the people the last cent that they will yield, or shall we continue it as a government, a government of individualism, and continue the policy of allowing the man—the individual—to enjoy the natural resources and develop them for his benefit? Ours is not a socialist government; this is not a nation of paternalism; and some day the error of this forest policy will be seen, and we will turn back to true principles as a matter of political wisdom. [Applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that motion by providing that debate shall close in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment that all debate be closed upon the paragraph and amendments thereto in ten minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I now move that all debate close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that all debate close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were-ayes $1 noes 20.

So the motion was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from Kansas as amended by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rather expected that before this debate closed we would hear about "looting" the public domain, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has not disappointed us. He insists, mildly as the Forestry Service has vehemently, that all those opposed to the present for-estry policy are "looters" of the public domain. I tried to answer that briefly yesterday. Mr. Chairman, I, as Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, had the honor of forwarding from that office the papers submitted to the President for his signature setting aside one of the largest forest reserves in my State and a number in other Western States.

I had the honor of the authorship of the bill that transferred the forest reserves from the Interior Department to the Agricultural Department. I have always been a friend of proper forest reservation and preservation; I am now. I am opposed to the policy as carried on and to the extravagant expense of the service, an extravagance which, if it were really understood on the floor of this House, would result in the cutting of this appropriation in two, if not in a still further reduction of it.

The Interior Department protected 85,000,000 acres of reserves from fire, as effectually as 160,000,000 are now being protected, with a measly appropriation of $350,000, and carried on timber sales, made fire guards, built roads, and made trails. Ten times that appropriation is now demanded for twice the area.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the western people will be no longer misunderstood in this matter. We do not complain of a reasonable charge for the products of the reserve, and we never have. We complain rather as to the vexatious conditions under which we must avail ourselves of the use of the reserves. I will tell you a brief story of one of those "looters" who have been referred to.

Three or four years ago I camped one night with a friend beside a little spring in the desert. Along in the evening a four-horse team came into camp. We went out from our tent and found an old gentleman, about 70 years of age, with four horses, and with a little handful of scrubby timber on his wagon. After having helped him take care of his team and prepared supper for him, we inquired why he was coming from the direction of the forested mountains with such a trifling load of almost worthless material. He said that he lived at Burlington, 35 miles below. He had been to Carter Mountain, 35 miles above; in all, 70 miles over a hard road. He went up to the mountains to get some posts and poles to put a fence around his little cabin on his homestead.

The slopes of Carter Mountain are covered for miles with dead timber. That man was a law-abiding citizen, and besides he believed he would be arrested or pursued if he did not find the forester and get his permission to get some dead poles. After hunting about a day he found him. The forester inquired as to whether or no he was entitled to the free use of timber under the law, asking him about his homestead. He said that he had made a homestead entry, but that a mistake had been made in the description, and he had made an application to amend. The application had not been passed upon. So this high and mighty servant of the Federal Government turned that old man back and refused to allow him to have a single stick of timber, although there were millions of feet of it in sight, rot-ting on the mountain side. The old man came back. Do you think he was as well disposed a citizen when he came back as he was when he started on that journey? On his way back on a rocky slope, that had escaped the scrutiny of the forest service, the old man found the few sticks he had on his wagon when he drove into our camp.

Such cases are innumerable. Mr. Chairman, what we object to is having large areas of our Commonwealths turned into federal districts and having a federal jurisdiction established over every enterprise, over every effort made for the development of these great regions within our State. We believe in individualism, we believe in local control, and we do not believe in unnecessary government paternalism and bureaucracy. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $1,800; 3 clerks, class 4; 5 clerks, class 3; 7 clerks, class 2; 1 property clerk, $1,600; 1 clerk, $1,300; 9 clerks, class 1; 9 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 assistant property custodian, $900; 11 clerks, at $900 each; 1 engineer, $1,200; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 1 skilled mechanic, $900; 2 skilled laborers, at $720 each;

1 skilled laborer, $600; 1 fireman, $600; 4 messengers or laborers, at $600 each; 3 messengers or laborers, at $480 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $420 each; 4 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $75,560.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 9, page 25, the following:

And an additional $1,000 so long as the office shall be filled by the present occupant.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 9, after the word "dollars," insert:
"And an additional $1,000 so long as the office shall be filled by the present occupant."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I shall be obliged to reserve a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas reserves a point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I make the point of order if the gentleman from Iowa does not wish to make any remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] on the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no point of order. I submit that the proper procedure is to vote on the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. A point of order has been made. Mr. HEPBURN. But no point of order was reserved.

Mr. SCOTT. I reserved it thinking the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] would like to make a few remarks on the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not care to discuss the amendment. Mr. SCOTT. Then I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that this is an increase on the salary. Mr. SCOTT. That is what I had in mind, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as Iollows:

For all expenses necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and ilquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," in the city of Washington and elsewhere, including chemical apparatus, chemicals and supplies, repairs to apparatus, rent, gas, and electric current, $136,000; for official traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, $85,000; for employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purposes named, in the city of Washington, $200,000; out of the city of Washington, $266,460.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that part of the paragraph beginning with a semicolon on line 17, down to line 21, and ending with the word "dollars" on line 21, page 27, on the ground that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve his point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I think the matter has been discussed here and it is getting late. Let the Chair pass upon the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I would ask the gentleman from South Carolina to reserve the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, well, I will reserve the point of order.
Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the language referred to, to which the point of order was reserved, has reference to the so-called "referee board of consulting chemists." sincerely hope that the gentleman will not insist on his point No one in this House has a higher regard for the of order. No one in this House has a higher regard for the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry than I have. The entire world acknowledges the splendid work he has done in connection with pure-food legislation. But at the same time, to place in the hands of one man the terrific power, without appeal, that the pure-food law does may result in the destruction of millions of dollars of invested capital if that one man should decide that a certain material used in the preparation or preservation of food is harmful and deleterious.

Take the conditions that exist in the State of California. quarter of a century ago that State produced more cereals than any other State in the Union. By degrees its agriculturists have gone out of the business of raising cereals and have gone into the business of raising fruits. As wheat raisers they were practically at the mercy of the Liverpool market, which fixed the price for their commodity, whereas the fruit grower has three avenues for disposing of his crop.

He can sell it when it ripens, in its fresh state; he can dis-the approval of the world, for he finds a market for his product in every civilized country. There are millions of dollars invested in this industry. The Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry is, however, of the belief that the use of sulphur dioxide is harmful and deleterious.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman from California is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved.

Mr. LEVER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire that this debate shall go on indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserved the point of order, and the gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I beg pardon.

Mr. KAHN. The Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry has declared that sulphur dioxide is harmful and deleterious. He clared that sulphur dioxide is harmful and deleterious. He threatened to prohibit its use, whereupon the President of the United States appointed this referee board of consulting chemists, consisting of Doctor Remsen, of Johns Hopkins University; Professor Chittenden, of Yale; Professor Long, of the Northwestern University; Doctor Herter, of Columbia University; and Professor Taylor, of the University of California, men of the highest standing in their profession, to investigate these various questions of the use of preservatives. A friend of mine, a chemist, in speaking of the experiments of Doctor Wiley, said, and I think truly, that at times those experiments are not altogether scientific. When Doctor Wiley experiments on a number of people he begins by calling them the "poison squad." This squad is usually made up of young men in the government emsquad is usually made up of young men in the government employ, and before they enter on the experiment he makes them sign an agreement that if their health is injured or impaired by reason of the experiments they will not hold the Government responsible for the injuries sustained

In other words, he produces a condition of fear in the mind of every man upon whom he experiments, and, in consequence, possibly discovers results that he would not find if experimenting on normal men.

Now, there is in San Francisco a young physician, Doctor Atkins, who has taken great interest in this very subject. He, too, began to experiment. Quite recently he tried a diet of dried fruit upon a squad of tailors, and he called that squad the "health squad." He chose tailors because they lead a sedentary life. He gave them California dried fruit, treated with sulphur dioxide, every day. To one man he gave the fruit three times a day. In practically every case of the eight men upon whom he experimented there was an increase of health at the end of thirty days, and an increase of weight. He had the cooperation in his experiments of five or six of the leading physicians of San Francisco; and yet Doctor Wiley says that this sulphur dioxide is harmful and deleterious and ought to be prohibited.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if this referee board which has been appointed should not be given an opportunity to pass upon this appointed should not be given an opportunity to pass upon this subject, if the word of Doctor Wiley alone should control in the matter, millions of dollars' worth of property of the people of the State of California would practically be destroyed. Doctor Wiley is, no doubt, a most able chemist. But he is not infallible, and there ought to be an appeal from his decision to this board.

Will the gentleman yield to a question? Mr. MANN. Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman is aware that under the pure-food law no one's word can avail except the word of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. KAHN. True; but, Mr. Chairman, before he could have his case heard in the Supreme Court of the United States every orchardist in the State of California would be financially ruined.

I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to insert in the Record a brief report of Doctor Atkins in reference to his experiments, and also of some chemists who made analyses of the dried fruit used in those experiments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the matters referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., January 24, 1909.

Hon. Julius Kahn, Washington, D. C .:

Washington, D. C.:

I hereby submit to you and the California delegation in Congress a brief report of the results obtained in my recent experiments.

During the past thirty days I have been feeding eight men on a mixed diet of California dried fruits which has been highly sulphured in the drying process. The fruit was selected from the packing houses in different parts of the State, just as it is offered to the trade. The fruit consists of applies, pears, peaches, apricots, and sliver prunes.

Seven of the men have been eating the fruit once per day at the noon hour; the other man has eaten it three times per day, cooked and raw. The last-mentioned man is Colonel Richardson, who is a police officer working at night. During the test he has eaten 28 pounds of the fruit and says he never felt better in his life. At the beginning his weight was 225 pounds; now his weight is 227 pounds.

The seven men who have eaten the fruit once a day have all thrived except one, who lost 3 pounds, but says he attributes that to the loss of sleep and not to eating the fruit; for he says, "I have derived great benefit from eating the fruit. I have lost considerable sleep and worked very hard during the time." His name is Mr. C. B. Sens.

Mr. A. Lund, who has gained 1½ pounds, says, "I think sulphured fruit is absolutely harmless so far as its effect upon me is concerned."

On account of a severe cold Mr. Almquist lost 3 pounds during the second week of the test, but on the last week gained 4, making him weigh 1 pound more than at the start. He says, "I feel no ill effects from the test."

ruit is absolutely harmiess so far as its effect upon me is concerned fruit is absolutely harmiess so far as its effect upon me is concerned as each week of the test, but on the insulation of the many him weigh I pound more than at the start. He says, "I feel main him weigh I pound more than at the start. He says, "I feel main him weigh I pound more than at the start. He says, "I feel fully as well as when I began the diet; in fact, my weight shows I have improved."

Mr. F. Nagel has gained 9 pounds during the test, and says, "I feel fully as well as when I began the diet; in fact, my weight shows I have improved."

Mr. J. E. Nordquist weighed, when he began the fruit diet, and at the close tipped the scales at 145 pounds. He says, "I think my whole physical condition has improved; I sleep and feel better than when I began the diet.

Sained sained exactly 4 pounds, and says, "I do not feel any weight of the fruit."

We for a start of the fruit."

Mr. Henry Stieglitz also gained 4 pounds, and says, "When I began the test my stomach was bad, and I could only eat two meals a day; now I cat three and relish them all."

During the test the weather has been unusually bad, so that the 7 men, who lead sedentary lives, owing to their business (being tailors by profession), were still further hindered from exercise in the open air by the weather. Still further, these men were subjected to considerable heat in the room where they work on account of the gas grates for heating their froms. Notwithstanding all these unhealthy conditions, the heaths squad, "after undergoing all the usual clinical test, tribute the general improvement in the condition of the consideration of the categories of the fruit upon alimentation, as few persons in ordinary life eat sufficient fruit.

The object of this test was to determine by clinical observation if there was any harm in eating California sulphured fruit dried fruit undernormal conditions, and I have tried to eliminate fear and imaginary evils from the mind of each subject by appealin

Dr. Albert J. Atkins,

1609 Franklin street, City.

Dear Sin: We inclose herewith reports of our examination of your samples of dried fruits (10 not cooked, 10 cooked), 4 each (2 cooked, 2 dry), of apples, pears, silver plums, peaches, and apricots.

The best understanding of this work may be obtained by consulting the analytical data, which are of necessity greatly condensed.

The general results of similar experiments made by us over a year ago, a copy of which we inclose.

Inasmuch as the same fruits have been consumed by your squad in like proportion (6 times of each kind) for thirty days, a fair average of the amount of sulphur dioxide consumed during this period can be deduced from the results of the 10 cooked samples (2 of each kind). By this means we find that 1 man eating 4 ounces of the cooked fruit per day (dally proportion for each man) would take into his system an average of one-half grain of sulphur dioxide per day; or, in other words, during the entire month he would eat 120 ounces (about 8 pounds) of the cooked material, equivalent to 67.5 ounces (4.2 pounds) of the original dried fruit, and from which he would obtain about 15 grains of sulphur dioxide during the entire experimental period.

This diet would furnish to the individual at any one time a minimum dose of about one thirty-third of a grain, and a maximum of about 1 grain of sulphur dioxide.

Some inconsistencies are apparent in the tables, which are naturally to be expected, as the practice of each cooking is not controlled with any degree of precision; and the fruits themselves vary greatly, even those sulphured at the same time. This latter fact is due in part to an unequal absorption of sulphur by the ripest and less ripe fruits, as well as to the variation in size, etc.

Under these conditions it will be readily seen that only general results can be obtained either in the laboratory or in commercial practice. Furthermore, the freshly sulphured fruit rapidly loses a considerable proportion of its sulphurous acid and continues to di

CURTIS & TOMPKINS, By P. W. TOMPKINS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman restate his point of order?

Mr. LEVER. The point of order is that this section carrying the words beginning on line 17, after the semicolon, and ending on line 21, after the word "dollars," page 27, is contrary to existing law and not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman inform the Chair which portion of the language he considers out of order?

Mr. LEVER. I consider the whole clause that I have named out of order. There is nothing in the pure food and drug act which authorizes this language making the appropriation, and there is no other law.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of the Chairman to another point: That the appropriation for all expenses necessary for carrying into effect the pure-food act is in the provision above, and if all the expenses are provided for in the paragraph above, there can be no authority for this particular appropriation.

this particular appropriation.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the point made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever] and the point made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] are not well taken. There is an act of Congress authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to employ such persons as Congress may from time to time authorize him to employ; that is to say, as Congress may from time to time make appropria-tions to enable him to employ. And in reference to the point made by the gentleman from Texas, it is obvious that the word "all" is intended to extend over the remainder of the paragraph and to include those parts of the paragraph to which he has called attention as well as the first lines of it. The case seems so clear that I do not care to take time to argue it

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Foster of Vermont). The Chair desires to call the attention of the committee to the following language in section 523 of the Revised Statutes, being a portion of the organic act establishing the Department of Agriculture: He-shall appoint such other employees as Congress may from time to time provide, with salaries corresponding to the salaries of similar officers in other departments of the Government; and he shall, as Congress may from time to time provide, employ other persons for such time as their services may be needed, including chemists, botanists, entomologists, and other persons skilled in natural sciences pertaining to agriculture.

Now, that is very broad authority. The Chair also desires call attention to the language in another statute, section 169 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of these several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copylists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rate of compensation respectively as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

This language has from time to time been held sufficient authority for an appropriation in a general appropriation bill, and it seems to the Chair that this language that has just been read is analogous to the language in the organic act of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the Chair is about to overrule the point of order, and I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired, first of all, to call the attention of the gentleman to the state of things under the organic act, and the Chair will now be glad to hear anything further on the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to have the Chair make a ruling.
Mr. BURLESON. Before the Chair rules, I want to direct his attention to the fact that the particular paragraph against which the point of order has been raised, considering its phraseology, can not be claimed to be based on the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture. You will notice that it follows immediately a provision or paragraph which provides for "all expenses to carry into effect the pure-food act." Hence it relies for its validity in this bill upon the provision of the pure-food law. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely no authority in the pure-food law for the paragraph against which the point of order is raised and you can be the paragraph. the point of order is raised, and you can not escape the conclusion that the paragraph purports to rest upon the pure-food act, for the concluding part of the paragraph objected to includes these words:

Assistants, clerks, and such other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purposes named.

What purposes named. Why, you look to the paragraph immediately preceding, which provides for all expenses necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the pure-food act.

As I see it, the Chair can not possibly escape the conclusion that this paragraph depends for its right to remain in this bill upon the provisions of law contained in the pure-food law, and if there is no provision in the pure-food law authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to employ such assistants and clerks and other persons as he may see fit, and so forth, then this item necessarily must fall to the ground. In the pure-food act there is no such authorization; hence, I say, the Chair should sustain the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Weeks having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 86.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the harbor at Blaine, Wash., to determine the cost and advisability of its improvement.

Senate concurrent resolution 82.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made to ascertain the most feasible and practicable route to build a canal or inland waterway on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, connecting St. Andrews Bay, in the State of Florida, and the Mississippi River near New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, with a view to determining the advantage, best location, and probable cost of such canal or inland waterway, and to submit a plan and an estimate for such improvements.

Senate concurrent resolution 82

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of Popham Beach, Maine, with a view to the building of a bulkhead or breakwater along said beach for the protection of property of the United States, and to prevent the deposit of sand in navigable waters adjacent thereto.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8906. An act to provide for the retirement of certain officers on the active list of the Regular Army who have been passed over in promotion by officers junior to them in length of commissioned service.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when the pure-food law was passed, it was in the mind of Congress that the organic act creating the department did authorize the Secretary of Agri-culture to appoint clerks, and assistants, and so forth. It seems culture to appoint clerks, and assistants, and so forth. to me that the only question here is as to whether this portion of the paragraph-and such other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purposes named—is subject to a point of order. Upon reflection, it would seem to me that the authority to employ such other persons as may be needed is practically the same thing, identically the same thing, as the employment of such other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary, because the persons who may be needed are to be judged by the Secretary. While the language is not precisely the same, the authority is precisely the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The pure food and drug law simply unloaded an additional subject upon the Department of Agriculture. In itself it afforded no additional machinery of administration. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has indicated, it was believed at the time that the organic act provided the method for furnishing this machinery. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, after the semicolon, in line 17, page 27, all the words down to "dollars," on line 21, and to insert thereafter the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 17, page 27, and insert, after the semicolon, the following:

"For the examinations of specimens of foods and drugs, made in the Bureau of Chemistry, under the direction and supervision of such bureau for the purpose of determining from such examination whether such articles are adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of said act, in the city of Washington, $200,000; out of the city of Washington, $266,460."

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. That amendment is written in the language of section 4 of the food and drug act of June 30, 1906, and I say frankly that it is intended to eliminate the operation of the so-called "referee board of consulting chemists." I tried to point out yesterday that this referee board was appointed in violation of law. I tried to point out that the referee board was violation of law. I fried to point out that the referee board was appointed at the behest of manufacturers who were not obeying the pure food and drug act of 1906. I pointed out, Mr. Chairman, that there was no necessity for the use of any of these chemicals in canned goods and foods. I pointed out, I think, clearly that the operation of this referee board of consulting chemists had the effect of tying the hands of the Chief of the Russey of Chemistry, whose statutory duty it is to enforce the Bureau of Chemistry, whose statutory duty it is to enforce the pure food and drug act of 1906. I pointed out, too, that the exercise of the functions of this referee board of consulting chemists acted in the nature of an absolute superseding of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry in the performance of the duties imposed upon it by law.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to read for the information of the Committee of the Whole a portion of a letter just received from the Secretary of Agriculture. At the proper time I will ask for permission to insert the whole letter, in justice to the Secretary, but I want at this point to read this portion, which bears upon this proposition:

You ask what duties in the Bureau of Chemistry are assigned to members of the referee board, and whether these gentlemen act under the authority of the chief of the bureau. No duties in the Bureau of Chemistry are assigned to these men. They are all connected with prominent universities and have their own laboratories. They do not do any work under the authority of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry.

I call especial attention to that language:

They do not do any work under the authority of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry.

Let me put alongside of that language the language of the statute, the language that we passed, the language that we intended to have obeyed in the enforcement of the pure food and drug act. I read from section 4 of the act-

That the examinations of specimens of food and drugs shall be made in the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, or under the direction or supervision of such bureau.

Yet we are told by the Secretary of Agriculture that this extra legally appointed referee board is not connected with the Bureau of Chemistry and does not exercise its authority in conformance with the directions of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. LEVER. Yes.
Mr. COLE. Does the gentleman contend that the findings of the Bureau of Chemistry are absolutely binding upon the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. LEVER. I contend that the law points out just exactly what the Secretary of Agriculture shall do with the facts furnished to him by the Bureau of Chemistry. The facts are handed to the Secretary, as I understand it, and if, in his judgment, it seems to him that a good case has been made, a fair case has been made, those facts are certified to the proper district attorney of the proper federal court. The Secretary of Agriculture has no discretion in the matter. The data is collected by the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry or those acting under the direction of the chief. But I want to read further from the letter of the Secretary referring to this board. He says:

They report directly to me.

Mr. Chairman, they do not report to the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, but to him, the Secretary of Agriculture. He continnes:

The law speaks to me and says that I must keep out of foods substances which are deleterious to health. When great conflicts of scientific opinion arises concerning the deleteriousness of a particular substance, I refer that substance to the referee board—

Oh, no; not to the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, as provided in section 4 of the pure-food act; not at all; but to the referee board-and an elaborate scientific investigation is conducted to determine whether the substance is harmful.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that section 4 of the act provides that this scientific investigation shall be made by the Bureau of Chemistry or under the supervision of the Bureau of Chemistry, and you can not get away from the fact.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. LEVER. Yes.
Mr. TAWNEY. Does the pure-food act also authorize the appointment of this referee board?

I have searched the pure-food act carefully Mr. LEVER. night after night for more than a week, and I say to the gentleman that there is not an iota of language in it which authorizes the appointment of this referee board of consulting chemists, nor any other law so far as that is concerned. I read further from the Secretary's letter:

My action in allowing or excluding a substance is based upon-

Based on what? Based on the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry? Based on the findings of those acting under the supervision or direction of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry? Not at all.

My action in allowing or excluding a substance is based upon the report of this board, which is made directly to me.

A board illegal in its make-up; a board absolutely exercising authority which this Congress did not give.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The letter referred to, with inclosures, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 3, 1905.

A. F. LEVER, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Hon. A. F. Lever.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Lever: I am sending you the information requested in your two letters of the 1st instant regarding the referee board of consulting scientific experts and the board of food and drug inspection. Most of the information which you desire concerning the referee board is contained in a letter which I have written to Mr. Scorr, the chairman of the House committee, on January 13, 1909, and I am taking the liberty of inclosing a copy of this letter. You ask what duties in the Bureau of Chemistry are assigned to the members of the referee board, and whether these gentlemen act under the authority of the chief of the bureau. No duties in the Bureau of Chemistry are assigned to these men. They are all connected with prominent universities and have their own laboratories. They do not do any work under the authority of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry. They report directly to me. The law speaks to me, and says that I must keep out of foods substances which are deleterious to health. When grave conflict of scientific opinion arises concerning the deleteriousness of a particular substance I refer that substance to the referee board, and an elaborate scientific investigation is conducted to determine whether the substance is harmful. My action in allowing or excluding the substance is based upon the report of this board, which is made directly to me. I think, with this statement and the copy of my letter to Mr. Scorr, you will be able to answer any questions which may arise in the course of the debate.

The formation of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection is also treated in my letter to Mr. Scorr, but you ask for the orders and official documents relating to the creation of the board, and I am sending you a copy of the order. I also send a copy of Doctor Dunlaj's appointment. General Order No. 111 defines the duties of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, as follows:

" The board will consider all questions arising in the enforcement of the food a board at these hearings, and stenographic notes are taken of them. This is done by the force in Doctor Dunlap's office, and the records of the board are kept on file there. Hearings on general topics of interest are conducted by the board, frequently in view of a proposed publication of an important question under the food and drugs act, as, for example, the case of hearings on coffee, mineral waters, bleached flour, etc. Hearings before the board are also frequently had on appeal from cases heard at the various port laboratories.

2. Executive sessions.—These are held regularly twice a week, or oftener if need be, and are given over to the consideration of important questions affecting the enforcement of the act, such as questions of interpretation, cases arising for prosecution under the act, and important questions raised in connection with correspondence. As secretary of the board, Doctor Dunlap keeps the minutes of executive sessions, and presents all the matter at the meetings for the consideration of the board.

3. Correspondence.—All correspondence affecting the food and deven the board, Doctor Dunlap keeps the minutes of executive sessions, and presents all the matter at the meetings for the consideration of the board.

3. Correspondence.—All correspondence affecting the food and drugs act passes through Doctor Dunlap's hands for consideration, and he, personally, handles as much of the correspondence as time allows. Especially is this true of letters which require the signature of the Secretary of Agriculture. Only by such control is consistency of action on the part of the department obtainable.

4. Doctor Dunlap also personally supervises the preparation of the letters for the signature of the Secretary, which are to be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, dealing with imported foods and drugs, indicating the offense under the act. These letters are afterwards considered by the other members of the board before being submitted to the Secretary for consideration.

5. Doctor Dunlap prepares all letters for the consideration of the board, where, in his opinion, imported foods and drugs should be released at the ports. These letters are afterwards submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for his consideration and approval.

6. He handles personally considerable correspondence on food and drug matters affecting the interpretation of the act; these letters go to the chiefs of the food laboratories. He also handles largely the correspondence coming to Washington on questions affecting imports, where such letters are sent by importers or other interested parties.

7. He considers, as a member of the board, all recommendations to the Secretary of Agriculture for seizures under section 10 of the act.

8. All the evidence in cases of adulterated or misbranded foods, when the cases are passed to the other members of the board for their vote.

9. He has also given a portion of his time to the proper action to take, the cases are passed to the other members of the board for their vote.

9. He has also given or asked concenting the food and drugs act, which have been submitted to the Attorne

Hon. Charles F. Scott,

Chairman Committee on Agriculture,

House of Representatives.

Dear Sir. On February 20, 1908, I appointed five men consulting scientific experts of this department, and on February 24, 1908, I organized them into a board called the "referee board."

I appointed these men under a provision in the agricultural appropriation bill which authorizes me to employ such assistants as I may consider necessary to secure the enforcement of the pure-food law.

I organized them into a board under authority of section 161 of the Revised Statutes, which authorizes the head of each department to prescribe regulation not inconsistent with law for the government of his department. Section 161 reads:

"The head of each department is authorized to prescribe regulations not inconsistent with law for the government of his department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it."

The men so appointed are Dr. Ira Remsen, president of Johns Hopkins University; Dr. Russell H. Chittenden, of Yale; Dr. John H. Long, of the Northwestern University; Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor, of the University of California; and Dr. C. A. Herter, of New York. Their duties are to determine the wholesomeness or deleterious character of such foods or articles used in foods as I may refer to them for such determination.

The law snys to me that foods which are deleterious in themselves or which contain deleterious substances shall not be shipped in interstate commerce. It should be remembered that the pure-food law and the appropriation act speak to the Secretary of Agriculture. Examinations of samples are to be made by the Bureau of Chemistry, but the enforcement of the law is with me. It is necessary for me to know definitely whether certain articles are deleterious or not, and where there is grave conflict of scientific opinion on the question, I refer the subject to this board.

I have referred thre conflict of scientific opinion on the question, I refer the subject to this board.

I have referred three subjects—benzoate of soda, sulphur dioxide, and saccharine. No reports have been received by me from the referee board on these subjects, but I am expecting a report on benzoate of soda and on saccharine about March I next. The members of the board are paid $25 a day for each day they are actually employed, and so far they have received in salary a total of $4,703.04, and the expense of the investigations conducted by them on the subjects of benzoate of soda and saccharine have been $27,119.84.

The referee board was appointed because certain large manufacturers of foodstuffs asked thorough investigation by the most distinguished scientists in the land. They asked the President to select a number of disinterested scientific men competent to pass upon the question, and stated that if these men found that sulphur dioxide, saccharine, and henzoate of soda were harmful, they would, of course, immediately discontinue their use. The President corresponded with the presidents of a number of the leading universities of the country, who suggested certain names to him, from which he made the selection of the five men I have heretofore named, and these men were appointed by me and organized into a board, as stated.

It will be remembered that when the pure-food law was under discussion before a committee of the House, the view was expressed that the Secretary of Agriculture should be allowed a free hand in selecting experts of renown on questions of the wholesomeness of certain foods and articles used in foods, and this had always been my position. Apparently, it was indorsed by the Congress when they included the item in the agricultural appropriation bill giving me authority to employ such persons as I considered necessary for the enforcement of the law, and I have used the discretion confided in me by Congress.

I may say that it is my personal opinion that it is necessary to have the opinion of five eminent, disinterested experts as to the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of benzoate of soda, saccharine, and sulphur dioxide.

BOARD OF FOOD AND DRUG INSPECTION.

When the department started in to enforce the pure-food law, I was looking to the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry to handle the administrative details and the chemical end of the work, and to the department solicitor to handle the legal work, and to these two officials jointly to report to me on such details as required my personal action, such as the exclusion of adulterated and misbranded foods or drugs offered for import, advice as to prosecutions, etc.

I soon discovered that we were needing another chemist to devote his whole time to the work of enforcing the law. The Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry has many other duties in addition to his duties under the pure-food law. The questions to be considered are important, and the decisions are more generally accepted when they are not a one-man product.

pure-food law. The questions to be considered are important, and the decisions are more generally accepted when they are not a one-man product.

To get this additional man, the presidents of some of the leading universities in the country were consulted, and finally Dr. F. L. Dunlap, of the University of Michigan, was appointed upon the strong recommendation of President Angell. Doctor Dunlap was appointed under the authority conferred upon me in the agricultural appropriation act.

Coincident with Doctor Dunlap's appointment, under authority of section 161, Revised Statutes, I organized the Board of Food and Drug Inspection, consisting of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry as chairman, Dr. F. L. Dunlap, and Mr. George P. McCabe. This board acts for me. This board advises me on matters concerning which the pure-food law says I must make a decision. It in no way interferes with the duty assigned by the pure-food law to the Bureau of Chemistry. This duty is the examination of samples, and this is the sole duty imposed upon the Bureau of Chemistry by the food and drugs act. This duty that bureau now performs.

I inclose a statement, showing in detail the expenses of the referee board from February 20 to December 31, 1908, inclusive.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

General Order No. 111.

United States Department of Agriculture, Office of the Secretary, Washington, D. C., April 25, 1907.

There is hereby created in the Department of Agriculture a board of food and drug inspection. The members of the board will be Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, Chief, Bureau of Chemistry, chairman; Dr. Frederick L. Dunlap, associate chemist, Bureau of Chemistry; and Mr. George P. McCabe, Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture. The board will consider all questions arising in the enforcement of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, upon which the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture is necessary, and will report its findings to the Secretary for his consideration and decision. All correspondence involving interpretations of the law and questions arising under the law not theretofore passed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be considered by the board. The board is directed to hold frequent meetings at stated times in order that findings may be reported promptly.

In addition to the above duties, the board of food and drug inspection shall conduct all hearings based upon alleged violations of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906, as provided by regulation 5 of the rules and regulations for the enforcement of the food and drugs act, approved October 17, 1906.

JAMES WILSON,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary of Agriculture.

United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., April 25, 1997.

Mr. Frederick L. Dunlap, of the State of Michigan, is hereby appointed associate chemist of the Bureau of Chemistry and a member of the Board of Food and Drug Inspection in the United States Department of Agriculture, at a salary at the rate of $3,500 per annum, on the miscellaneous roll paid from the fund appropriated for the "Enforcement of the food and drugs act, 1907."

The above-named appointee is hereby required to take the oath of office immediately and file the same, together with a statement of legal and actual residence and personal record, with the appointment clerk in the Department of Agriculture, and report for duty in person to the Secretary of Agriculture, and be subject to the rules and orders of the Secretary of Agriculture. This appointment shall take effect on the appointee taking the oath of office and reporting for duty.

JAMES WILSON,

Secretary of Agriculture.

R. W. ROBERTS Acting Appointment Clerk, United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the pending paragraph close at 5 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, the people of California believe in the pure-food law. We are not opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina because we are opposed to any part of that law; but I hope the amendment will not prevail, because I believe that a referee board such as has been provided by the Secretary of Agriculture is absolutely necessary for the proper administration of the pure-food act. This board was appointed because, as the Secretary has well said in his letter, there was great difference of opinion among chemists upon certain subjects upon which, under that law, he was called to act. One of the matters submitted to this referee board is the question of the use of sulphur in the curing of fruit, and I think that the condition of this question shows clearly that this board is absolutely necessary.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYES. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to ask the gentleman from California if it is his contention that there is anywhere in any law authority for the appointment of this referee board of consulting chemists?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; my contention is that there is ample authority, not only in the general law as read from the Chair, but in the pure-food act as well.

Mr. LEVER. I should be glad to have the gentleman put his

Mr. HAYES. That is settled; the Chair has already ruled that the language in the bill is in order and was not opposed to any existing law. That settles that so far as this bill is concerned. In the early stages of the administration of the purefood law this matter came before the Bureau of Chemistry, and Doctor Wiley held that more than 350 milligrams of sulphur dioxide per kilogram of dried fruit was deleterious to health, thus holding, so far as I know, contrary to the universal opinion of chemists on this subject all over the world.

The rule of the German chemists has been for years that

1,050 milligrams per kilogram of fruit was not deleterious, which is three times the amount that Doctor Wiley has held to be the safe limit. Mr. ROBERTS. Milligrams of what?

Mr. HAYES. Of sulphur dioxide. Now, the people of California have treated their fruit with sulphur, and they have for years easily met this limit of the German chemists and the French chemists and the chemists of all the governments of the world; yet the ruling of Doctor Wiley, if enforced, would de-stroy the dried-fruit business. As my colleague has already pointed out, it would cause the loss of millions of dollars invested in this business in California. Now, if the referee board, to whom this matter is referred, should finally find that Doctor Wiley is correct in his conclusion, then, of course, we must abide by that decision, and we are ready to do so; but until it is thus determined by the highest authority I think that the Congress of the United States ought to permit the Secretary to use the method which, under the law, he has provided to determine whether or not Doctor Wiley is correct in his conclusion that anything more than 350 milligrams of sulphur dioxide to the kilogram of fruit is deleterious.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unan-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYES. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have no criticism to make of Doctor Wiley. We have no doubt he is an honest man and is doing what he thinks is his duty, but all men are mortal and liable to err. What we ask in this matter is that the law as the Secretary has interpreted it may continue to be administrated and in this manner all disputed questions may be decided. tered, and in this manner all disputed questions may be decided by the referee board, which is composed of men of such high authority in chemistry that when their decision is once announced no one will think of questioning the correctness of their conclusion, whatever it may be.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, as I understand it, is aimed to eliminate what seems to be known as the "referee board." Unless I am absolutely mistaken in the premises, this referee board has been appointed practically without authority of law. In other words, as it strikes the ordinary man interested in the administration of the pure-food law, it would seem as though, having passed a law intended to correct a great many evils and abuses, a certain number of people interested in the continuation of those evils and abuses have been powerful enough to have the operation of the law suspended by having this referee board called into existence. are going to establish a court of errors and appeals in this matter of pure food, let us do it by law and not by indirection. If it is true that the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry is not competent to perform the duties of his office and it is necessary to call in these gentlemen with high-sounding names and titles to check up his rulings, let us do it, but let us do it in the light of day; let us do it in the face of the people of the country, who I believe want this law, and who I believe are in favor of its enforcement, and who I believe are behind the Secretary of Agriculture and Doctor Wiley in the manner in which they have directed the enforcement of it.

Now, what is the situation as we find it presented to us here to-day? Just as soon as any body of men interested in the continuation of the sale and distribution of impure food are powerful enough to approach the officers of the Government they, too, may have a referee board appointed. Nobody can possibly know where they are at in this matter. This referee board which makes this last report only removes the subject once more into the domain of doubt and controversy. They set about the wellnigh impossible task of proving a negative. It would be impossible for them to prove actually what they have attempted to prove and say that there were no deleterious substances used in the manufacture of these goods. Of course they can cite the fact that these substances did not deleteriously affect this man or that man, or this or that body of men, but that does not prove anything. It would take a thousand times that amount of testimony to offset the direct results obtained by the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry when he, acting under the law, acting with all the authority given to him, proves and submits in his report that such substances are deleterious and—
Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask that the gentleman be given one minute more in order to answer a question.

Mr. SCOTT. I am obliged to object, because the time of debate has been limited. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Townsend].

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, personally, I can conceive of nothing more deleterious to the impartial enforcement of the pure-food legislation than the passage of this amendment, which would put in the hands of one man, however good he might be, however wise-and I am not questioning the wisdom of the chief chemist-the power to decide, without review, all great questions of this kind. I have not heard—

Mr. BURLESON. The courts can review his actions.
Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not heard one word of criticism as to the character of this board. It is composed of eminent chemists of national reputation and unquestioned character; and yet because the board did not agree with the Chief of the Division of Chemistry it is proposed to abolish the many and retain the

I contend, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that this law contemplated that the Secretary of Agriculture should carry out its provisions, that he was to promulgate rules and regulations for enforcing it, and that the appointment of the board was under his advice and with his consent. The spirit and intent of the law has been complied with and great good to the people has been secured, and at the same time no honest manufacturer has been injured by the proper regulations which have been established.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to be very careful before we confer such powers as have been conferred in the purefood law upon one man, for even though, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] suggests, the courts might review his action, they could not review it until possibly much legitimate business of the country had been destroyed or disastrously af-The argument thus far advanced in favor of the amendment is the claim that the board is not legally constituted. The ruling of the Chair on the point of order settles the legality of the matter, so far as the House is concerned; and inasmuch as common fairness, as well as the ultimate success of the purefood law, depends upon its just interpretation and the highest degree of scientific ability employed in fixing standards, and inasmuch as there has been no argument against the board and no denial that it is in the highest degree efficient, I hope the amendment will fail.

Mr. BURLESON. Let me ask the gentleman— Mr. TOWNSEND. I am fearful I have occupied my two

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the very clear and comprehensive decision of the Chair in passing upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever] seems to leave it unnecessary to further discuss the question of the legality of the appointment of this board of referees. I will pass that, therefore, and call attention to the effect of the amendment that has now been offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever], and which, if it should prevail, would bring about the anomalous condition of a bureau chief within a department having greater power than the secretary in charge of that department. If this amendment prevails it means that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have no authority to review a decision which is made by one of his bureau chiefs, or to call upon anybody else to help him reach a determination in regard to the justice of that view and the wisdom of it. That would be a condition so intolerable from every standpoint of good administration that I can not believe this committee will be willing to support a proposition which will bring it about.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee and Mr. BURLESON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I am obliged to decline to yield. The only other point to be considered by the committee is the wisdom of the action of the Secretary in appointing this board of And that is a question also which seems to need no longer discussion than the minute which I have left. It has already been referred to by both the gentlemen from California [Mr. HAYES and Mr. KAHN], who called attention to the enormous industrial and commercial interests that were at stake, great industries that were in danger of destruction if the dictum announced by the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry should be permitted to stand as the law. Undoubtedly the Secretary of Agriculture exercised wisely the discretion vested in him when, in view of the possibility of irreparable injury to great commercial interests, he determined that the question should not be deemed settled until the last word had been spoken.

And I venture to say that there is not a court in the United States but would hold that the last word has been spoken upon any chemistry proposition when the gentlemen named as members of the board of referees have passed upon it, because they are the most eminent in their profession in the United States.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. SCOTT. The wisdom of the Secretary's action therefore seems to be as indisputable as the legality of it, and I trust that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever]

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 41. Mr. SCOTT. Tellers, Mr. Chairman. And pending that request, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the request for tellers, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scort] moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 42. The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 27053, the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE COURTS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 6359) to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, with the House amendment disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair announces the appointment of Mr. Campbell, Mr. Olcott, and Mr. Johnson of Kentucky, as conferees on the part of the House.

ILLUMINATING GAS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Order No. 24.

Ordered. That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and hereby are, authorized to investigate the quality and composition of the illuminating gas furnished in the District of Columbia, and to send for persons and papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Reserving the right to object, have they not been investigating that for the last three or four weeks?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There have been five or six witnesses before the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do you want with the order then?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We desire to make a further investigation. There has been some claim made by some of the witnesses that it would cost five to seven millions to make a change of the system.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are you going to report this ession?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not certain whether we will or not. We want the power that is given by this order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many experts have you

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Five or six.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On which side of the question? Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, three upon one side and four upon the other.

Mr. SIMS. The committee has no side.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I would like to ask if the gentleman's committee has been investigating why it is that we have so many gas lamps in the city of Washington, while we also have electric lights, and why it is that we find so many of the old-fashioned gas lamps in the streets?

Mr. SIMS. The Committee on Appropriations can answer that question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not hear the gentleman's question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the order was agreed to.

ALLOWANCE TO DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Mr. BANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16274 and to consider the same in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16274) to amend section 10 of chapter 252, volume 29, of Public Statutes at Large.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of chapter 252, volume 29, Public Statutes at Large, is hereby amended by striking out in the twelfth line of said section the word "two" and inserting in place thereof the words "three and one-half," so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That when in the opinion of the Attorney-General the public interest requires it, he may, on the recommendation of the marshal, which recommendation shall state the facts as distinguished from conclusions, showing necessity for the same, allow the marshals to employ necessary office deputies and clerical assistance, upon salaries to be fixed by the Attorney-General, from time to time, and paid as hereinafter provided. When any of such office deputies is engaged in the service of any writ, process, subpora, or other order of the court, or when necessarily absent from the place of his regular employment, on official business, he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses only, and his necessary and actual expenses for lodging and subsistence, not to exceed three and one-half dollars per day, and the necessary actual expenses in transporting prisoners, including necessary guard hire; and he shall make and render accounts thereof as hereinafter provided."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "and one-half" where the same appear in line 7 of page 1 and in line 8 of page 2 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of the bill given by the gentleman. I should like to know if it has been reported on by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill seems to be reported from the The SPEAKER.

Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BANNON. The bill is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by a unanimous report and is recommended by the Attorney-General. The object of the bill is simply to increase the maximum allowance to office deputies of United States marshals for necessary and actual expenses for lodging and subsistence when necessarily absent on official business outside of the place of their employment, making it $3 per day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Three dollars and fifty cents.

Mr. BANNON. No, sir; the amendment strikes out "and a half," and the increase is from two to three dollars per day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MACON. I should like to ask the gentleman this question: The bill does not contemplate any great raid on the Treasury, does it? Mr. BANNON.

Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is there anything in the bill to limit the number of deputies?

Mr. BANNON. The existing law provides for that, and provides that deputies shall not be appointed, except by and with the consent of the Attorney-General.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. In every case?

Mr. BANNON. In every case under the act of 1896.
Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. What is meant by the provision "when he is compelled to go outside of his territory?"

Mr. BANNON. Why, outside of the locus of his employment. If a man, for instance, is employed in the city of Cincinnati, and must go to Columbus or to Dayton or to Springfield, then he will receive his expenses, not exceeding $3 a day.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The provision ought to be, when he is required to go outside of the district in which he is a deputy. Is it intended to confine it to the city in which he lives?

Mr. BANNON. No; I mean outside of the place of his em-Take, for instance, a given district, the federal office building will be in a certain city, as in the city of Chicago or the city of Cincinnati. That is the place of his employment. Occasionally the deputy marshal is given a writ and is obliged to go to some other city to serve that writ, and this simply allows him, when he is away from his headquarters, going to another city, not to exceed $3 per day for expenses; and I want to say for the benefit of the House and the gentleman that before he can get any expenses whatever allowed he must file an itemized account with the Attorney-General, showing every item expended, and an affidavit that it was paid for in good and lawful money of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. We are in this condition in the southern district, that the marshal for the southern district is also marshal for the eastern division and the southern division of the southern district. In that district are located three cities, Savannah, Augusta, and Macon. Now, the marshal resides at Macon. If he appoints a deputy in Macon and sends him to Augusta, then is he entitled to this extra compensation when he goes from the city of his residence to the city where he attends court?

Mr. BANNON. It is not for compensation at all. It is for

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It adds that much to his total compensation, though.

Mr. BANNON. It is not for compensation, but merely for expenses and adds nothing to his compensation. This is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and recommended by the Attorney-General.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. As I understand the gentleman, there is no contemplation of an increase of salary at all.

Mr. BANNON. None whatever.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. It is merely for expense money.

Mr. BANNON. Merely for expense money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed. On motion of Mr. Bannon, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER SHIP CANAL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Railways and Canals from the further consideration of Senate bill 8154, to amend the charter of the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company, approved June 30, 1906.

I make this request in order to get the return of the bill to the Speaker's table. A similar bill has been reported by that committee to the House, and the Senate bill has been referred to that committee but not reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Railways and Canals from the further consideration of the Senate bill referred to, of which the Clerk will report the title, and that the same be returned to the Speaker's table.

The Clerk read the title of the bill. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the purpose of getting this onto the Speaker's table—a change of reference?

Mr. DALZELL. No; I want to get a chance to pass it in the House. The Senate bill went to the Committee on Railways and Canals of the House on the same day that the Committee on Railways and Canals reported an identical bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does this bill do?

Mr. DALZELL. It extends the time for the completion of this canal. The gentleman will have an opportunity to pass on the merits of it when I ask to pass the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this the only way the gentleman can

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this the only way the gentleman can get the bill from the Railway and Canals Committee?

Mr. DALZELL. It is not the only way. The committee could report it, probably, in time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is on the Committee on Rules, is he not? He could have a rule by which he could bring this matter before the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this request be granted, it will be on the Speaker's table, a similar House bill having been reported. Mr. DALZELL. Yes; I can ask unanimous consent for con-

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; I can ask unanimous consent for consideration, and that is what I propose to do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does it require unanimous consent?

Mr. DALZELL. No; I do not think it does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman ought to let us know what the provisions of the bill are, because if he puts the bill on its passage, it will pass regardless of whether we wish to consent or not. consent or not.

Mr. DALZELL. I can state what the purpose of the bill is. The charter granted by the last Congress, or perhaps the Congress before, to this company provided that the canal should be commenced within a certain period of time and completed within a certain period. The incorporators have been at work, expended a large amount of money for procuring rights of way and storage reservoirs, and have been prevented from financing the scheme as they expected to do, by reason of the panic. They ask now an extension of time for the commencement of the canal and for its completion.

Mr. MACON. How much time? Mr. DALZELL. I have forgotten just the period. What does the bill say?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 19 of the act granting the Lake Erla and Ohio River Ship Canal Company rights to construct, equip, maintain, and operate a canal or canals and appurtenant works between the Ohio River, in the State of Pennsylvania, and Lake Erle, in the State of Ohio, approved June 30, 1906, be, and it is hereby, amended as follows: In said section of said act strike out the words "three years" and insert the words "six years" in lieu thereof; also strike out the words "ten years" and insert the words "thirteen years" in lieu thereof.

Mr. DALZELL. It gives three additional years, Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman ask for consideration of the bill now?

Mr. DALZELL. No; I do not ask for consideration now. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 8460. An act to provide for the deduction of hatchways and water-ballast space from the gross tonnage of vessels.

STATE OF COLORADO, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Colorado, 88:

CERTIFICATE.

I, James B. Pearce, secretary of state of the State of Colorado, do hereby certify that the foregoing joint resolution of the seventeenth general assembly of the State of Colorado, passed and adopted at the regular session thereof, is a true and correct copy of the original joint resolution now on file in the office of the secretary of state.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Colorado, at the city of Denver, this 29th day of January, A. D. 1909.

[SEAL.] JAMES B. PEARCE

Senate joint resolution 1. By Senator Bohn.

Whereas, by the acts of May 15, 1828, and of June 7, 1832, granting full pay during life to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who served with credit during the Revolutionary War, the Congress of the United States established a precedent for the reward of patriots who offered their lives in defense of the libertles of their country and of the Constitution of the United States: and

States; and
Whereas it has been the policy of this country from the beginning to maintain a small Regular Army, and in time of war to rely upon the patriotism of the people to rally as volunteers in defense of the flag of patriotism of the people to rany as volume the nation; and Whereas it is a recognized fact that the civil war, 1861 to 1865, forms the most sangulary chapter of the history of the world, during which struggle the Regular Army was maintained at about 25,000 men, while the Volunteer Army numbered more than 2,500,000 officers and which struggle the Regular Army was maintained at about 25,000 men, while the Volunteer Army numbered more than 2,500,000 officers and enlisted men; and

Whereas it is also a recognized fact that the Union of these States was preserved and the national authority maintained by the patriotism, fortifude, and valor of the volunteers, to whom this great, reunited people, now enjoying the inestimable blessings of a preserved Union, owe a debt of gratitude that can never be paid; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States during the civil war made frequent pledges that the services of the Volunteer Army should be fully rewarded and recognized by a grateful country; and

Whereas the act of 1901, retiring Charles A. Boutelle, a volunteer officer of the Union Navy, with the rank and retired pay of a captain of the Navy; the acts of 1904, 1906, and 1907, granting increased rank and retired pay to the officers of the Regular Army and Navy, based solely on the ground that they had served with credit during the civil war; and the act of 1905, providing for the retirement of two officers of volunteers, namely, Generals Joseph R. Hawley and P. J. Osterhaus, with the rank and pay of brigadier-generals, were acknowledgments of the obligations incurred by the Congress of the United States while the civil war was in progress; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States a bill entitled "A bill to create in the War and Navy departments, respectively, a roll to be known as the 'Civil war officers' annuity honor roll,'" which bill grants to the surviving officers of the Volunteer Army who served with credit during the civil war as officers or enlisted men for the total period of two years one-half of the pay of the highest rank held by them during such term of service, and to those who served less than two years and not less than six months, like pay in proportion to their periods of service: Therefore be it

Be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Colorado, That, in our opinion, the surviving officers of the Volunteer Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who served with credit in the great war for the preservation of the Union are entitled to recognition equal to that bestowed upon the officers who served in the Revolutionary war by the acts of 1828 and 1832, and should receive from the National Government honors and emoluments equal to those which have heretofore been bestowed upon any officer who served in time of war in defense of the country.

Resolved further, That we respectfully urge upon the Sixtieth Congress of the United States the passage of the above-named bill, and request the Senators and Representatives of the Sixtieth Congress from the State of Colorado to aid in the prompt enactment into law of the bill above mentioned, that the surviving officers of the Volunteer Army, Navy, and Marine Corps may, upon application, receive the pay and emoluments to which they are justly entitled by the reason of their services during the civil war and precedents heretofore established.

Resolved further, That, in our opinion, as such survivors constitute but a small remnant of that body of gallant men who led the Union forces to final victory, and their ranks are being rapidly depleted, the Congress of the United States should lose no time in redeeming the obligations to these men made by the Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth, and Thirty-ninth Congresses of the United States.

Stephen R. Fitzgerald, President of the Senate.

H. L. Lurers, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved this 29th day of January, A. D. 1909, John F. Shaproth, Governor of the State of Colorado.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. I did not hear the statement made a moment ago by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. It is a House bill merely permitting a change of date in the assembling of the Philippine legislature; that is

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 2, to strike out the proviso beginning in line 8, in the following words:

Provided, however, That the Philippine legislature may by law fix the date for the commencement of its annual sessions.

After the words "provided further," in line 10, to strike out the word "That" and insert the word "and," and after the word "election," at the end of line 12, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Philippine legislature, after its first meeting as herein provided, may by law fix a date other than the first Monday of February in each year for the commencement of its annual sessions.

So as to make the bill read:

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh section of the act entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the first Monday of February in each year and continuing not exceeding ninety days thereafter (Sundays and holidays not Included), and the first meeting of the legislature shall be held upon the call of the governor within ninety days after the first election: Provided, That the Philippine legislature, after its first meeting as herein provided, may by law fix a date other than the first Monday of February in each year for the commencement of its annual sessions: And provided further, That if at the termination of any session the appropriations necessary for the support of government shall not have been made, an amount equal to the sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for such purposes shall be deemed to be appropriated; and until the legislature shall act in such behalf the treasurer may, with the advice of the governor, make the payments necessary for the purposes aforesaid."

The amendments were agreed to.

CONDITIONS AT ARMY POSTS.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 280), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to visit, during the recess of the Senate, such military reservations, posts, and stations of the United States as in the committee's judgment should be examined, in order to ascertain existing conditions at such posts, the necessities for legislation, and any other and further information bearing upon military posts as may seem important and of value in the consideration of future proposed military legislation. And the committee is further authorized to send for persons and papers, to subpoena witnesses and administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to take notes or testimony and to do clerical duties, the expenses incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

RENT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 87), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

District of Columbia:

Whereas the Government of the United States is now paying $471,000 annually for the use of private bulldings in the city of Washington and the District of Columbia in which to conduct the public business and store valuable documents; and

Whereas some of these buildings are not fireproof and are unsafe and otherwise unfit for such service; and

Whereas recently a large number of valuable public records were destroyed by fire in one of said buildings and the public business otherwise interrupted: Therefore

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of Representatives be, and are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to thoroughly investigate the necessity for renting said buildings or other private buildings for said purposes, the reasonableness of the rental paid and to be paid, the kind and length of existing leases, and the necessity for the Government to erect suitable buildings in said city and District in which to transact the public business, and the probable cost thereof, making a full and complete investigation of the whole subject, the said committees being fully authorized and empowered to summon and examine witnesses, administer oaths, and make said investigation as clear and complete as practicable.

LONDON SLIDING SCALE FOR GAS.

Mr. GALLINGER. An article in the Progressive Age of January 15, 1909, entitled "London sliding scale for gas," by Civil Engineer William D. Marks, who is an authority on the subject, is of great interest at the present time, when the gas question is being considered in both Houses of Congress. I move that the article be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 696) and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR LATIMER.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on February 27 I will ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life and character of Hon. Asbury CHURCHWELL LATIMER, late a Senator from the State of South Carolina

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE POWERS.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, February 27, I will ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life and character of LLEWELLYN Powers, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 4th instant, approved and signed the following joint resolution:

S. R. 118. Joint resolution to enable the States of Tennessee and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory.

DISTRICT BUILDING INSPECTION DEPARTMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 697); which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Commissioner of Labor and Special Agent Victor S. Clark, of the Bureau of Labor, relating to an investigation conducted by them into the office of the building inspector of the District of Columbia, and I recommend that the Congress authorize the appointment of a commission of three members, with power to administer oaths, to make a thorough investigation of the building inspection department of the District of Columbia; and that an appropriation of $3,500 be made to defray the expenses of this commission.

I append herewith an extract from a recent verdict of a coroner's jury, and certain letters which explain the reason of the investigation conducted by the Bureau of Labor.

I agree fully with the position taken in the report from the Bureau of Labor that the building inspection department should not be left under suspicion as the result of unproven charges. In the interest of the building inspector, no less than of the public, there should be a thoroughgoing investigation of the conduct of his office. If that important department of the District government is inefficient or imporperly conducted, its personnel should be reorganized. If, on the other hand, the criticism of it is unfounded, this should be demonstrated and sustained.

The White House, February 5, 1809.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1909.

The report was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT LEXINGTON, MICH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate concurrent resolution No. 80.

Concurrent resolution 80, submitted by Mr. SMITH of Michigan on the 27th ultimo and reported from the Committee on Commerce on the 3d instant, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the harbor at Lexington, Sanilac County, Mich., with a view to deepening the same to a depth of 20 feet and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the District of Columbia appropriation bill be laid before the Senate for consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25392) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 13, on

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 81, line 18, before the word "bailiffs," to strike out "three" and insert "seven;" in line 19, after the word "each," to strike out "four bailiffs, at $720 each;" and in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three hundred and sixty" and insert "four hundred and eighty," so as to read:

Police court: For 2 judges, at $3,600 each; clerk, $2,000; 2 deputy clerks, at $1,500 each; 2 deputy clerks, at $1,200 each; deputy clerk, to be known as financial clerk, $1,500; 7 balliffs, at $900 each; deputy marshal, $1,000; janitor, $540; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; fireman, $480.

The next amendment was, under the head of "For courts and prisons," on page 85, after line 23, to insert:

The next amendment was, under the head of "For courts and prisons," on page 85, after line 23, to insert:

Sites for reformatory and workhouse: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to purchase two tracts of land, widely separated, of not less than 1,000 acres each, either or both of which to be situated in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia; one of said tracts shall be used as a site for the construction and erection of a reformatory of sufficient capacity to accommodate at least 1,000 prisoners, and the other for the construction and erection of a workhouse of sufficient capacity to accommodate at least 500 prisoners and to build necessary temporary structures on each tract; the said commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission to consist of three persons, one of said commissioners shall be chairman, which commission shall employ an architect skilled in the construction of such buildings to prepare all plans, specifications, and estimates deemed necessary or required by said commission, and which shall first be approved before acceptance by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are hereby required to construct said reformatory and workhouse; and on their direction the prisoners at the time confined in any existing workhouse of said District shall clear and prepare any or all such tracts of land for building, and assist in the construction of any or all of said buildings; and the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and the Attorney-General, and the warden of the jail of said District, are hereby authorized and directed, on the request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to require male prisoners at the time serving sentence in said jail to do the said work. For the purchase or condemnation of said sites, work of preparing same for buildings, and erection of said temporary structure and the means necessary thereto, the sum of $16,696.64 is hereby appropriated, and in addition thereto the unexp

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to page 86, line 7. I move to amend the amendment at that point by striking out the word "prisoners" and inserting the word "inmates." As it applies to a reform school, it seems to me "inmates" is a better word than "prisoners

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree to that. I think it is a wise suggestion.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I call attention to line 3, on page 86, where the location of the institution is limited to the State of Maryland or the State of Virginia. I take it that the idea is to place it somewhere near the District of Columbia. It might be that there would be in some other State a good location, and one just as close; and I suggest that we place it at within 50 miles of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. How far? Mr. BURKETT. I suggest that we put it within 50 or 75 miles of Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the belief is-certainly it is the belief of the commission which have investigated this matterthat they will be able to get land within 15 or 20 miles of the city of Washington.

Mr. BURKETT. If it be in the State of Maryland, I can see that they may go more than a hundred miles, and I thought it had probably better be limited to miles rather than to States.

Mr. GALLINGER. They will get it as near the city of Washington as possible. In the report of the commission the provision suggested was that the land should be purchased in the District of Columbia or in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia. There is no acreage in the District of Columbia that possibly could be secured of sufficient amount, so the Committee on Appropriations struck out the District of Columbia. But the purpose is, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, to get the land as near the city of Washington as possible, on the line of a steam railroad or an electric railroad, at such a point as it can be bought for a small sum per acre, and the gentlemen who have investigated this matter say that there is going to be no difficulty about that.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say that the purpose of the amendment I suggested was to accomplish exactly what the Senator has stated in his remarks; that is, to get the land close to Washington, rather than in any particular State. Therefore, I suggested that it might be better to substitute the words "within 50 miles or within 25 miles of the city of Washington," rather than limit it to the State of Maryland or the State of Virginia, where the location selected might be a long way off.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no other State within that distance, is there, where a selection could be made?

Mr. BURKETT. There are a good many places that are a long distance from Washington in those States. That is what was trying to get at.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will assure the Senator from Nebraska that there will be no trouble about that. The land will be secured as near Washington as possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. GARY. Mr. President, this seems to be entirely new legislation. The necessity for it may be evident to members of the committee, but those of us who are not on the committee are not so familiar with it, and I should be very glad if the Senator in charge of the bill would give us some idea about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that this is a matter that has been agitated for a great many years. We have, within a mile and a half of this Capitol, on the shores of the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, a collection of institutions-a jail, a workhouse, a smallpox hospital, a crematory, and various other buildings. They are very much crowded. They ought not to remain there. As a matter of fact, the city is expanding very rapidly in that direction, and the conditions at the jail are deplorable in the extreme. There are, I think, about 600 prisoners in the jail. There are no sanitary conveniences there. It is so crowded that in many instances there are two prisoners in a very small cell; they are in en-forced idleness; there is no means of putting them to work; and the result is that in place of making them better they are growing day by day worse, so far as their morals are concerned, and we are simply supporting them without getting any return whatever from them.

In the workhouse the conditions are not so bad, although that also is very much crowded. Those men are worked to some extent on the streets, being sent out in gangs for that purpose. The prisoners confined in the jail are short-term prisoners, the law requiring that all prisoners sentenced for over one year shall be sent to a penitentiary. We have no penitentiary in this District. The penitentiary prisoners are sent to Moundsville, to Atlanta, and to other prisons in different parts of the country to be cared for. Realizing the bad conditions existing there and the necessity for doing something, Congress at its last session legislated so as to authorize the President of the United States to appoint a commission to investigate the subject and to recommend remedial legislation.

The President appointed a commission, consisting of Judge Stafford, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, a very able man; Mr. John Joy Edson, a very prominent business man in the city of Washington, and a man who takes great interest in charitable institutions; and Mr. La Dow, of the Department of Justice, who has had to do with prisons and reformatories. Those gentlemen made a very exhaustive investigation. They traveled all over the country, visited prisons and reformatories, and they have made a report that is embodied in Senate Document No. 648, which ought to be read by every Senator. It is a most interesting and illuminating report. As a result of their investigation, they have recommended the legislation which is embodied in this bill.

The proposition is that we shall purchase two widely separated tracts of land of a thousand acres each in some adjoining State; that on one of those tracts of land we shall build a reformatory, to which short-term prisoners can be sent-all those people who are convicted of petty crimes; and that on the other we shall build a jail, to which shall be sent the prisoners who have committed crimes of sufficient gravity to send them to jail.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. When the Senator from New Hampshire says

"send them to jail," does he include in that felonies?

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not catch the Senator's question. Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator, does he include among the offenses to which he refers felonies?

Mr. GALLINGER. No crime that is of sufficient gravity to require a state-prison sentence.

That is what I referred to. In other words, you do not propose to send to this newly constructed jail those who are now, for instance, sent to Moundsville?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. We do not interfere with

As I suggested, these institutions are to be widely separated, one on one tract of a thousand acres and the other on another tract of a thousand acres, so that those in the reformatory will not come in contact with the prisoners in the jail.

At the last session of Congress we appropriated $85,000 to erect an administration building at the workhouse, which, as I said before, is on the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River. That appropriation is still held in the Treasury, for the reason that it has been thought unwise, pending this discussion, to expend that amount of money for an administration building, which, if expended, would do nothing whatever for the poor unfortunates who are housed there, crowded to suffocation almost, but would simply give us an administration building. The com-mission say that they can buy 2,000 acres of land in the ad-joining State of Virginia or Maryland and construct temporary buildings for $100,000. This bill proposes that we shall reappropriate that $85,000, or the $83,500 which remains of it, and add a sufficient amount to make it $100,000, which will buy the land and will enable them to build temporary structures to house the criminals while they are improving the land and building permanent structures, the purpose being, as I understand, to construct buildings of concrete, which is comparatively inexpensive, but which will answer every possible requirement.

The commission called my attention particularly to one institution, the location of which I have forgotten, where they found buildings that were estimated to cost $240,000, but by utilizing the labor of the convicts they had cost only $40,000. So that if permitted to put up temporary structures to house the convicts while they are employed in the construction of these buildings, we shall get the buildings constructed for a very small amount of money.

Massachusetts has a farm at Bridgewater, which has attracted a great deal of attention. I think it is 30 or 40 miles from the city of Boston. It consists of a thousand acres, and prisoners are sent there from Boston day by day. They are required to work. They have made a garden spot of that tract of land, where they not only perform labor on the land, but where they raise vegetables that are furnished to all the other penal institutions of the State, and I think they are also manufacturing certain articles for use in the other institutions. It is a model institution of its kind. It is the purpose of this commission, if this legislation is enacted, to create two institutions somewhat similar to that at Bridgewater, where the prisoners themselves can not only construct the buildings to a large extent, but where they can raise produce that can be utilized in the other eleemosynary institutions of the District of Columbia. It is not a dream; it is simply a practical question that confronts us at this time. It relates to a matter that we must do something about in the near future. It proposes, if it is carried into effect, to rid this city of the deplorable condition that exists on the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, and to relieve us from an odium that has been denounced by the courts; that has been denounced by Congress; that is a reproach to this great Capital City of the Nation; and that we must get relief from in some way.

Mr. President, I have looked into this matter with great care; I have conferred with members of this commission, who are very able and very humane men, and I am fully satisfied that the scheme which they have worked out is one that will give us the desired relief, and that it will not be, as upon the face of it it might seem to be, a proposition that will involve an expenditure of a very large sum of money. On the contrary, I think as a matter of economy that no scheme could possibly be proposed that would be as economical as the scheme involved in the legislation which is proposed in this bill.

I shall be glad to answer any question that may be asked in so far as my information will enable me. I do hope, in the interest of common humanity, in the interest of good administration, in the interest of the poor unfortunates who are committed to our care, that the proposed legislation will be allowed to remain in the bill.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I believe if Senators had read carefully the report referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] there would not be a dissenting vote to the adoption of this amendment. The report is rather lengthy, but I am going to ask that the most important part of it be inserted in the RECORD. It shows a most deplorable condition in this city in regard to prisoners. It shows that while the jail was constructed for the purpose of accommodating 300 prisoners, at different times as many as 600 or 700 prisoners have been confined there.

The Senator said the report showed that as many as two prisoners had been put in one cell. I find instances referred to in the report where as many as three were confined in one cell.

Such a condition can not be defended from any standpoint. It should be a rule, so far as national affairs and state affairs are concerned, when men are convicted of crime and sentenced for a certain term of servitude not to confine them in cells. They ought to be put to work so as to assist in earning money to pay the expenses of maintaining the system.

Under the system in force in this city what do we find? We find in the jail men arrested for crime and kept there before they are convicted, and after conviction they are sentenced to the same jail and placed in cells without any opportunity for exercise and without any of the conveniences of life. It is a most deplorable condition.

Now, turn to the workhouse. While it is denominated a "workhouse," it is badly crowded, and most of the inmates are kept in confinement instead of being at work.

The commission appointed to make this investigation was beyond question a very intelligent body of men. They have gone thoroughly into this subject. They insist that prisoners They have boys and women-sentenced for as much as six months, or where there are mitigating circumstances, shall be sent to the workhouse, where they can be kept employed and where they will probably earn the necessary amount to pay the expenses of the administration of the institution. The commission also insists that where prisoners are sentenced for as much as one year, instead of keeping them in a little cell five by nine, two and three to a cell, locked up there for a whole year, without any exercise, without earning one cent, and with conditions that are almost unbearable, that a change should be made; that farms should be purchased near the city, improvements made thereon, and these people put to work.

Take a boy or a young man, put him in this jail, and keep him there for twelve months, with the surroundings found there, and there is no hope for his reformation when he comes out of prison. There are many who, notwithstanding the fact that they have transgressed, notwithstanding the fact that they have gone wrong, if given an opportunity to reform and do better, would doubtless do so.

I do not believe there ought to be the slightest opposition to the adoption of this amendment. In this connection I ask that the matter beginning on page 6 of the report, which I have marked, under the heading "How the jail is filled, and why," from the bottom of page 6 down to the close of page 28, be printed in the Record. It recites the conditions existing in the jail and the workhouse, and to my mind makes an unanswera-ble argument in favor of the establishment of the new system. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOW THE JAIL IS FILLED, AND WHY.

The matter referred to is as follows:

How the jail is filled, and why.

As the police court is without authority to sentence to more than a year's imprisonment, and as no person can be sent to a penitentiary unless his sentence exceeds one year, that court can not sentence its prisoners to the penitentiary, but must sentence them either to the workhouse or the jail. Between the workhouse and the jail it has, as the statute now reads, only this strange choice: If the sentence is stamonths or less, it may be to either place; if it is more than six months, it must be to the jail. (D. C. Code, 934.) The consequence is that great numbers have been sentenced by the police court to the jail. Although that court is prohibited from sentencing for a longer period than one year, even where there are "cumulative" sentences against the same person, yet it has happened not infrequently that there have been in that court against the same person, for different offenses, several sentences, which have been held not to be "cumulative" in a legal sense, resulting in the prisoner being confined in the jail for eighteen months or more. When we shall see the condition of prisoners in the jail, the evil of this practice will be more apparent. Most of those sentenced by the police court have been found guilty of small larcenies, or disorderly conduct sometimes involving assaults of aminor character, of vagrancy, and the like. Such offenders do not always object to a steady abode, with warmth and shelter and plenty of food, and especially with nothing to do, even though the place be called a jail, and do not hesitate to commit some offense that will secure them such winter quarters. At the writing of this report there are confined in the jail substantially 600 persons. Of these the number awaiting trial or awaiting sentence or awaiting the result of their appeal from the sentence of the trial court is a few over 100. All the others, nearly 500, are serving sentence.

CONDITIONS AT THE JAIL.

The jail was originally intended to accommod act odors. There is no dining room for the prisoners. They are fed out of tin cans thrust through the grating of the doors. In these cells they are obliged to stay all the time, day and night, except for a half hour each day when they are marched through the inside corridor. There is no jail yard, and they never go outside of the jail walls. They pass their time in absolute idleness—all of them except the very few who are employed in preparing and serving food to their fellow-inmates or in a little routine work, COMMENT.

COMMENT.

The evils of such a state of things are too obvious to call for or even to justify extended comment. That men and women should be sent to these narrow and crowded cells, the innocent with the guilty, the first offender with the hardened criminal, in one promiscuous assembly, to corrupt and be corrupted by each other, the lazy to be humored and fostered in their laziness, the industrious to be deprived of every form of employment, to be fed like beasts and mainfained at the public charge, not only with no prospect of improvement in their condition, but with the moral certainty that they will come out far worse than they went in, is a fact that has become a stench in the nostrils of the whole community and ought to be felt as a shame and disgrace to the whole Nation, whose representatives are responsible for its existence.

CONGRESS RESPONSIBLE.

whole community and ought to be felt as a shame and disgrace to the whole Nation, whose representatives are responsible for its existence.

CONGRESS RESPONSIBLE.

The attention of Congress has been called repeatedly to the overcrowded and defective condition of the jall. In 1903 the Attorney-General, in his annual report to Congress, informed them as follows:

"The jail is old, without modern improvements, and of insufficient capacity for the present needs. Something should be done at once toward remedying the present defects in construction, increasing its capacity, and providing a suitable dining hall, so that the present system of feeding the prisoners can be done away with."

These recommendations have been repeated in each annual report up to and including the one for 1907, and in his current report the following paragraph appears:

"The attention of the department was called recently to the condition of the jall in the District of Columbia, which had become so crowded by reason of the large number of prisoners confined there as to render it inappropriate as a place of confinement and to endanger the health, discipline, and safe-keeping of its inmates. Under the authority conferred upon me by law, I directed the removal of a large number of prisoners to the jail at Fort Smith, Ark, which had become nearly empty by reason of the admission of Oklahoma to statehood. This measure temporarily releved the congestion, but the relief has been temporary only, and conditions have again become very unsatisfactory in the District by reason of the inadequate provision for the detention of criminals. I respectfully urge upon the Congress the necessity of prompt and effective action in dealing with this situation. If it be deemed advisable to await the report of the commission recently appointed to consider the subject at large, I recommend that provision be made for the temporary custody of prisoners now confined in the jail in such places of provisional detention as can be secured for this purpose. Such action will und

CONDITIONS AT THE WORKHOUSE.

At the workhouse the physical conditions are somewhat better than at the jail. Since 1900 Congress has appropriated for this institution $260,000, of which $142,000 was expended in the construction of two modern wings, separated from each other but so related that they may form parts of one complete building if it should be decided to build a permanent workhouse for the District at that point. These two wings contain 334 cells, and in them only 1 prisoner is confined in 1 cell. In the old wings, however, the condition is still crowded and 2 or more prisoners are confined in the same cell. Taken as a whole, the workhouse, like the jail, is crowded far beyond its normal capacity. There has been a large increase in the number of inmates. The average for the five months of the present fiscal year is higher by 125 than for the corresponding period of last year. Even at the workhouse no regular system of industry is carried on. Some of the prisoners are sent about the city to be employed in gangs upon the streets, and may be seen almost any day as they are driven to or from their work, in stripes and under guard. Others are engaged in menial service about the institution, but with the present system it has not been possible to give adequate employment to the great majority of those confined. The present number of inmates at the workhouse is 400. On some days it has been 600.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE?

WHAT SHALL BE DONE?

It is perfectly obvious that something must be done. It is not a question of whether, but of what. If we are to continue the present plan and system, it is absolutely necessary to greatly enlarge the present jail and the present workhouse, and to invest large sums of money for that purpose.

TWO WAYS POSSIBLE.

Apparently there are two ways open. One is to temporize, to adhere to the present plan, making such changes and enlargements as are absolutely required, extending the present jail, erecting a new wing to the workhouse, but attempting no advance upon the present penal system. Under this plan we should continue to use the jail as we are now using it; we should merely enlarge the present workhouse so as to accommodate a larger number. If it should be attempted to make provision for the employment or outdoor exercise of the jail and workhouse prisoners upon the tract where the buildings are now located, it would require the building of a wall to inclose those institutions and would end in establishing a permanent penal colony in what will soon be, if it is not already, the heart of the city, within a mile or two of the Capitol and in the direct line of the extension of one of the finest avenues of the city, and will thus end in placing a permanent barrier between the natural growth of the city and a great and attractive territory on both sides of the Anacostia River. The other way would be to seize the opportunity now presented for putting the penal and correctional system of the District upon a proper and permanent basis, adopting a plan that can be followed and filled in as years go by, no matter how the city may grow or the needs of the system increase.

The first plan requires an investment of large amounts in property which ought not to be permanently devoted to its present uses. The jail can not permanently be used as a place where men are to serve sentences, because such men should be put to work, and it is not and can not be made a proper institution for that class of prisoners. Moreover, the adoption of the first plan will postpone the adoption of improved methods of dealing with criminal problems, and will tie us for many years to come to an antiquated and unreasonable system. The more we invest upon the present plan, the more difficult it becomes to change it, and thereby we are putting further and further off the true solution of our problems. The adoption of the second plan means the abandonment of the present jail as a place where prisoners shall be sent to serve their sentences, but permits the conti

THE CRIMINAL PROBLEM A PERMANENT ONE

Humiliating as it may be to confess it, the confession must be made that society is still in a state of siege. The property classes, and they comprise the vast majority of our population, live in a state of siege. If we doubt it, we have only to notice the bars and bolts on every hand, the watchman, the policeman, everywhere. After four thousand years of social order of one sort or another, after two thousand years of Social order of one sort or another, after two thousand years of Christianity, it is still the fact that those who have must maintain their possession by force or the threat of force. The mailed hand of government is over every house and shop and bank vault in the civilized world, and apparently it must be so for centuries to come. The criminal problem may be looked upon as practically permanent, and certainly we have none more important. What ought to be done to protect the law-abiding part of the community from the part that is disposed to prey upon it? That is the question. Of course the most desirable thing is to get rid of crime itself, either by transforming the lawbreaker into a law keeper and law defender, or, better still, by preventing the citizen from ever becoming a criminal at all. The possible prevention of crime is a great subject by itself. The possible reformation of the criminal is another.

THE MAIN OBJECT OF CRIMINAL LAW.

But the main purpose and object of criminal law we hold to be the welfare and protection of society itself. It is this object which underlies all sound legislation and judgments. It is this which justifies the infliction of punishments which would otherwise be cruel. It is this consideration that compels the judge to turn his eyes away from the suffering of the individual offender, and even from the greater suffering that often falls upon his family and friends, and keep his eyes fixed upon the thousands of innocent people whose safety and security demand that the consequences of lawbreaking should be painful.

THE TRUE PRINCIPLES CONCERNING THE TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS.

THE TRUE PRINCIPLES CONCERNING THE TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS.

We do not believe in taking any attitude toward the violators of law that will lead them to look upon their offenses as trivial, to look upon themselves as victims of oppression, or upon governments as their debtor. But we do believe in taking a passionless, patient, and impartial attitude toward them, making it as easy as possible to do right, as difficult as possible to do wrong, keeping always before their eyes the hope of redeeming themselves, and convincing them in every practicable way that they are still the makers of their own destiny. We believe that some way ought to be devised to prevent the return to social lifte of those who have committed grave crimes and have given no indication of reform. We believe that there should be a rigid separation of those who are awaiting trial from those who have been convicted. We believe that all convicted persons who are able to work should be compelled to work. We believe that those who may be reasonably supposed to be reformable should be treated and employed with that end in view. We believe in the beneficial effects of education upon most of those who are confined in prisons. We believe that no system of dealing with the criminal classes should ever at any point lose sight of the fact that the criminal is a man. He should never be needlessly degraded, insulted, or abused. We believe that a vital and momentous point of time is when the prisoner is released and turned back upon the world, and that the law should employ all possible agencies to guard and assist him making a new start. We believe that many who come up for sentence may be wisely put in the watchful care of judicious officers and given one more chance to choose between a life of decency and a life of crime. Belleving this, we are led to accept the following practical propositions as necessarily resulting from these convictions, so far at least as the District of Columbia is concerned:

WHAT WE RECOMMEND.

There should be-

There should be—

1. A jail, to be used only as a house of detention, never as a place of confinement for those under sentence.

2. A probation system for those cases which may be safely dealt with without sending the offender to any place of confinement.

3. A reformatory for all who must be sentenced to confinement and who nevertheless are hopeful cases.

4. A workhouse for those who must be confined and who are not proper subjects for reformatory treatment, and yet whose offenses are not such as to require that they be sent to a penitentiary.

5. Confinement in the federal prison or penitentiary for those worst offenders who are not proper subjects for either the reformatory or the workhouse.

6. A carefully guarded parole law for prisoners in these various institutions who may be safely released upon conditions.

To consider these propositions more fully:

1. A HOUSE OF DETENTION.

1. A House of Detention.

The present jall may be used for this purpose, and with some changes in its interior would be an adequate building for a long period of time. The outer jail—that is to say, the main walls of the building—are in excellent condition. Relieved of the sentenced prisoners, it would need to accommodate at present only a few more than 100. The interior could be torn out, modern cells constructed, sanitary plumbing introduced, a common dining room provided for, and the building could thus be made a commodious and suitable house of detention for all persons awaiting trial or awaiting the final determination of their cause. It would not only be sufficient for the present, but so far as we can foresee it would be sufficient even when the city shall have grown to three times its present size.

Being used only for the confinement of accused persons, it would not be regarded as a prison, and its presence would be far less objectionable than it is now. It would be more convenient if it were still nearer the courts, and it certainly ought not to be farther away. In most cities the house of detention is now built adjoining or as a part of the courthouse. In our opinion that is the correct method, and if a new courthouse should ever be erected here that plan might be adopted. There is no reason why such a building should not be architecturally attractive. In many places it is. The present building is not, as the workhouse is, a barrier to the extension of Massachusetts avenue. It stands at one side of that thoroughfare and at a considerable distance from it.

2. A PROBATION SYSTEM.

2. A Probation System.

2. A Probation System.

We are woefully and shamefully in need of this. Except in the juvenile court, we have nothing of the sort. Some of our judges have entertained such views of the law that they have felt justified in suspending sentence in some cases after a plea of guilty or conviction by the jury, and have allowed the offender to go on his own or other recognizance. Others of our judges have entertained such views of the law that they have not felt themselves empowered to do this. But even if we accept the view that courts have authority indefinitely to suspend sentences, notwithstanding the express mandate of the legislature that upon conviction a prescribed punishment shall follow, we are still in this position—that there is no officer in whose care the released person can be placed; there is no system for following up his subsequent career and informing the court whether he should be left at liberty or brought back and sent to prison; and there is no system by which he can be warned, guided, encouraged, and assisted to become a good citizen instead of relapsing into crime. Our study of the working of probation systems in other jurisdictions, and, so far as made use of, in our own, our reading upon the subject, and the testimony we have received from experts in this branch of penology has left us without a doubt that we should have such a system here. We accompany our report with a draft of a statute upon this subject which we believe would meet the needs of the community, and we earnestly recommend its enactment. (Exhibit F.)

THE NEEDS OF THE DISTRICT PECULIAR.

THE NEEDS OF THE DISTRICT FECULIAR.

The District of Columbia ought not to be put off in this matter by reason of any consideration Congress may be giving to the subject of a general probation law for all federal courts. Our situation is peculiar. The offenses dealt with in our courts are not merely such offenses as are cognizable in other federal courts, but include crimes of every character. In this respect, although all offenses committed in the District are offenses against the United States (since there is no other sovereignty), yet they are, almost all, exactly such offenses as when committed in a State are offenses against the State in distinction from offenses against the United States. Indeed the number of strictly federal prisoners from the District of Columbia is less than 30 out of a total of more than 1,400. Practically, for the purpose of dealing with this problem, we are to be regarded as a State by ourselves. We should have a system adapted to our own special needs.

THE PROBATION SYSTEM OUTLINED.

THE PROBATION SYSTEM OUTLINED.

When sentence is to be pronounced and it appears to the court that the case may be one calling for the use of the probation system, there should be an officer to whom the matter may be referred by the court and by whom the necessary information may be furnished. Such an officer would investigate the circumstances, if they were not fully brought out at the trial (and the most frequent use of the system will be in cases where there has been a plea of guilty and no trial at all), the previous record and conduct of the person to be sentenced, and all other facts which ought to be considered in determining the question. That question should be whether there is a reasonable probability that, if he should be given another chance under the restraints and encouragement of the probation system, he would never again break the law, but would ally himself permanently with the forces of order instead of becoming their enemy. If the court is convinced that such is the case, there should be at hand a wise and judicious officer in whose watch-care the offender should be placed, under prudent restrictions and conditions especially adapted to his case—an officer who will keep in touch with his charge and personify to his mind the kindness and also the severity of the law, an officer to whom reports must be frequently made by the subject, and who will keep the court informed of the subsequent course of the probationer. All this requires careful provisions by statute and a well planned, but not too complex, system of procedure.

The question whether the probationer has broken the conditions of his release or should, on the other hand, be finally discharged from probation, must ultimately be decided by the court; but the court may be greatly aided and enlightened by the reports and recommendations of such an officer. The officer should be in closest touch with the court and in all respects subordinate to it. In our opinion, he should be appointed by it, and be subject to discharge whenever the courts not overlooked. But we believe that on the whole the advantage of having the probation work of each court done under the supervision of, and in fulfillment of the conditions imposed by, the court which is responsible for the case outweigh these advantages, and that each court should appoint and control its own probation officers. The general plan of probation work should, however, be laid down by the statute, leaving to the court only the duty and province of applying the principles adopted to the individual case before it.

VIEWS OF EXPERTS IN PENOLOGY.

the principles adopted to the individual case before it.

VIEWS OF EXPERTS IN PENOLOGY.

The probation theory does not tend to minimize the offense. It rather magnifies it by restricting the liberty of the offender, and perhaps for a longer time than if he were confined in prison. It takes away many of his rights. The court prescribes what he may do, where he may go, with whom he may associate, and how he shall conduct himself. It requires him to shun evil companions, to abstain from drink, to keep away from the saloon, to work steadily for the support of those who are dependent upon him. One of the chief advantages is that it keeps the probationer in right relation to his family; if imprisoned he is for a time relieved of the obligation to support them and discovers perhaps that they can get along without him. Probation lays its hand upon him and compels him to support them. That is a condition of his liberty. In this way it tends to reformation without actual imprisonment.

But the system of probation ought not to be considered by itself. It must be considered in contrast with its alternative, imprisonment. Even in institutions where care is taken to separate the beginner in crime from the hardened offender it is not possible entirely to prevent contact. Some contamination is inevitable. Even at its best imprisonment is better calculated to develop than to arrest evil tendencies. The man who has been in prison has at least two terrible disadvantages, He comes out with the stigma of the prison, which hinders him from getting employment and heavily handicaps him in his struggle for a living. This stigma attaches to his innocent wife and children as well, who often suffer more than the guilty husband and father. The second is that prison acquaintances constitute an obstacle to a new and respected life. In prison he has come in contact with men who have no desire to reform and who are willing to drag others down to their own level. He can not always avoid them when he meets them out of prison. If they can not per EXPENSE.

Such a system need not be expensive even in the first instance, and such expense as may necessarily attend it will most certainly be overbalanced even in dollars and cents by the saving to the public which will result from the continuance of the probationers in industrial occupation instead of being supported in public institutions and by the permanent transfer of some of them from the criminal to the law-abiding class. The results already achieved by the system as it now obtains in our own juvenile court have demonstrated the correctness of this position.

our own juvenile court have demonstrated the correctness of this position.

We do not mean to put our recommendation of a probation system wholly or necessarily upon a mere monetary basis. Neither do we put it on the ground of a humane and philanthropic duty on the part of government toward its disobedient members. We believe there is a safer and an impregnable basis to be found in the prime duty of society to provide for its own welfare and protection. We look upon such a system as a practical method of recruiting the ranks of law-keepers from the number of those who would otherwise join the ranks of the enemies of government and order. No reasonable pains or expense should be spared to secure so desirable a result. And when we find, as we do, that the system, so far from proving a financial burden upon the community, actually pays for itself several times over even in the money point of view, we feel that the proposition ought to commend itself to conservative minds of every cast.

3. A Reformatory.

3. A REFORMATORY.

Next in order, and not less important, is the need of a reformatory. At present we have none. The National Training School for Boys and the Reform School for Girls, as we have already shown, are restricted to children not over 17 years of age.

the Reform School for Girls, as we have already shown, are restricted to children not over 17 years of age.

THE CLASS TO BE SENT THERE.

What we need is an institution to which the courts can send such offenders as can not be safely released upon probation, who must for one reason or another be confined for a time at least, and yet who are susceptible to good influences, capable of being trained to some useful form of labor, of being improved in body and mind and made more fit to meet the temptations of life—who have not abandoned themselves to criminal courses nor come to look upon themselves as at serious odds with society, but who will almost certainly turn out habitual criminals if they are not immediately turned from the path they have entered. It is not so much a question what is the name of the crime they have committed (barring a few of the gravest) as it is a question of how they came to commit it and under what circumstances it was done, and what the general disposition and character of the offender has been. Most of those who would be eligible to such an institution are between the ages of 17 and 30 years. We believe that the court before whom the case is tried will be able to make a generally wise decision upon the question whether the culprit is a hopeful subject for such treatment. It is believed that if there were such an institution now established in the District there are between 500 and 600 prisoners, now confined in fail, workhouse, or penitentiary, who would be receiving the benefit of its course of discipline and education.

SHOULD BE ISOLATED FROM OTHER INSTITUTIONS.

SHOULD BE ISOLATED FROM OTHER INSTITUTIONS.

Our visits to similar institutions in various States have convinced us that a reformatory for our District ought to be erected; that it should be located at a safe distance from all public institutions and, above all, widely removed from any other penal institution. One of the best informed and most energetic officers of such an institution said to us that if the State should erect a workhouse within sight of his reformatory he would resign at once, so strongly did he insist upon the necessity of absolute separation—not only separation in point of fact, but likewise in point of mental association. The object is to lead the inmate of the reformatory to regard himself as not yet sunk to the level of the criminal classes, to preserve his self-respect so as to enable him to go out at the end of his term feeling that he has not been branded as a felon.

AT LEAST 1,000 ACRES OF UNRECLAIMED LAND SHOULD BE SECURED AS THE SITE.

Another thing which we have been led to conclude from our visitations is that the reformatory should be erected upon a large tract of land belonging to the Government. It should be a farm of at least a thousand acres practically undeveloped. Such a tract could be secured by purchase, possibly in the District of Columbia; if not, then in the State of Maryland or the State of Virginia. The clearing and cultivation of the land itself, with the construction of necessary buildings, would furnish occupation for hundreds of those sent there.

SHOPS AND INDUSTRIES.

There should be shops as well, where the men could be taught to use their hands in trades of skill and engage in the manufacture of useful articles. Such articles could be used by the District government in its various departments and the whole product thus consumed. Nearly everywhere we went we found that this practice prevailed. In the various correctional institutions articles are manufactured in great variety and in large quantities, and are disposed of and used by the municipal and state departments.

EDUCATION.

There should be classes, too, where at some hours of each day the young men should be taught the rudimentary branches and hear lectures on practical subjects. In some of the best reformatories most of the teachers are found among the prisoners themselves. Those who are competent are selected and employed for this purpose and take a natural pride in the position.

LAWS REGULATING TERM.

LAWS REGULATING TERM.

With such a place to send to, there should be carefully framed laws regulating the length of the term and making it to correspond with the progress of the sentenced person. He should be able to shorten his sentence by faithful work and obedient behavior. It should be possible for him to work out his own salvation, if not without fear and trembling, yet without a doubt that honesty, industry, and a willing disposition would receive their reward. The one thing important above all others is that he should feel and know that he is being dealt with according to just and settled principles, so that the time of his release is measurably in his own hands. In these reformatories the inmate soon learns that he is hedged round by a well-nigh inflexible system; when he goes wrong, it is charged against him; when he does right, he receive credit. He comes to look upon it as impersonal and its results as attributable to his own folly or good sense. Such a lesson is in itself invaluable. When a prisoner incurs a penalty, he is reminded that it is his own doing; when he secures a benefit, he is not permitted to thank any officer as for a favor, but is reminded that he has earned it and it is his. The system thus cultivates and fosters a manly spirit of independence.

Provision should be made at the reformatory for the care and custody of female prisoners, of whom there would be, in all probability, 75 or 100. They could be employed in kitchen and laundry work and should be trained to useful service in various lines.

4. A Workhouse.

4. A WORKHOUSE. CLASS TO BE SENT THERE.

There is a large class of offenders whose crimes are not of that magnitude to demand a sentence in the penitentiary, and yet who are not proper subjects for reformatory treatment. They may be too old, they may have offended too often, or they may be of such a character that it would be useless to send them to a reformatory, and, moreover, to send them there might be to undo the work which is there being done upon hopeful cases. At the same time they may not have deserved a long-term sentence, or for other reasons it may not be best that they should be sent to a penitentiary, either state or federal. Among this class will be found many who have committed assaults, many vagrants, drunkards, deserters of their families, abusers of their wives, and the like. Usually these are men to whom hard work is the most dreaded form of punishment. They should be put to hard labor at long hours. Even among these some cases may be found that will deserve attention under a parole system, but most of them will need to be kept to, or near to, the end of their terms. For such men as these work in the open air, upon the farm or in construction of buildings or in redeeming waste places, is admirably fitted.

A LARGE TRACT OF UNDEVELOPED LAND FOR THE WORKHOUSE.

A LARGE TRACT OF UNDEVELOPED LAND FOR THE WORKHOUSE.

For the workhouse, then, as for the reformatory, we recommend the purchase of a large tract of undeveloped farm land, which may be either within the District or in one of the adjoining States, as may be found most advisable—a farm of not less than a thousand acres, to which the institution now known as the "workhouse" should be removed. Land adapted to the purpose may doubtless be obtained at a very low price per acre.

EXPERIENCE OF OTHER STATES.

In other States we have seen prisoners of this class successfully employed in such labor as we have just mentioned, and we have been deeply impressed by the sound judgment and clear foresight of those who have thus planned and executed. The farm at Bridgewater, Mass., is one instance. The farm of 2,000 acres near Cleveland, Ohio, is one instance.

HOW THE PRISONERS SHOULD BE TREATED.

How the prisoners should be treated.

That such men are not fit subjects for a reformatory does not mean that they are not to be treated with any reference to improvement or that they are not to be released the sooner by reason of exemplary behavior. Still less does it mean that they have forfeited their right to be treated as men and to receive every encouragement of which they prove themselves worthy. Least of all does it mean that they should be unnecessarily degraded by marks or badges of shame or compelled to look upon themselves as beyond hope. They should not be put in stripes. On the contrary, we believe in stimulating them to self-respect in all practical ways, and especially by setting apart a substantial portion of their earnings to be paid to their families, or for want thereof to be paid to them on their release; and we believe that their sentences should be somewhat elastic and responsive to their behavior and indications of a change in disposition. For such of them as are illiterate we would have some instruction, and for such as appear capable of mastering a useful trade implying some skill in handicraft, we would have employment adapted to that end.

From estimates submitted by the company which installed the cells at the present workhouse we find that those cells could be taken out, transported to a new workhouse, and there installed at a cost of about $35,000. A large part of the labor could be done by the prisoners themselves.

5. CONFINEMENT IN THE FEDERAL PRISON OR PENITENTIARY.

In the present situation of things we do not feel it our duty to recommend the establishment of a penitentiary especially for the District of Columbia.

CLASS TO BE SENT THERE.

There is undoubtedly a large class of prisoners who must be sent to some such institution. The offenses which they have committed are of so grave a character, or they themselves have repeated their offenses so often, or they have become so fixed in their evil tendencies, that long terms of imprisonment are necessary, and neither a reformatory not a workhouse is a proper place for their confinement.

We have at present some 400 prisoners serving sentence in state penitentiaries and in the United States penitentiaries at Atlanta, Ga., and Leavenworth, Kans. At Leavenworth there are at this writing about 75 prisoners from the District of Columbia; at Atlanta, 76; and the others are distributed between Moundsville, W. Va., and Trenton, N. J., the two latter being state institutions, which are under contract with the Department of Justice. No doubt there are many of these who would have been sent to a reformatory if there had been an institution of that sort when their cases were disposed of. One member of this commission is positive, from his own experience while presiding in the criminal court in this District, that such is the fact. In our opinion, if the plan for a penal and correctional system which we are here outlining should be adopted—that is to say, if we should have a jail used as a place of detention only, a reformatory, and a workhouse, such as we have recommended—the number of those to be confined in penitentiaries would be reduced by nearly, if not quite, one-half. It will be readily seen that this is a conservative estimate when it is recollected that all sentences of imprisonment which are longer than a year must, as the law now stands, be served in the penitentiary. There are thus many offenses which at present call for sentences in such an institution if the plan we recommend should be adopted. But it would still remain true, as we have said above, that there would be a considerable class requiring imprisonment in a penitentiary. It might amount in number to 200, or something over, at the present

SHOULD THERE BE A PENITENTIARY ESPECIALLY FOR THE DISTRICT?

The practical question is whether for this number a separate pententiary ought to be established in this vicinity. Upon principle, we believe that there should be local institutions to answer our local needs. We believe that as far as possible there should be a separation between those institutions which are expected to answer local needs and those which are national in their aim and scope, and we believe that local institutions ought to be under the direction and control of district officers. district officers

HOW THE LINE OF JURISDICTION SHOULD BE DRAWN ESTWEEN THE DISTRICT AND THE FEDERAL AUTHORITY.

Believing thus, it is our opinion that the jail, the workhouse, and the reformatory, if it should be established, should be under the exclusive direction and control of district authorities. The fact that the United States Government pays one-half of the taxes assessed upon property in the District does not, in our opinion, affect this question. That only means that the Federal Government is a large property holder within the District, but it affords no better ground for saying that the Federal Government should control the institutions of the District than would the fact that a multimillionaire owns more than half of the property in a city or a county justify the turning over to such an individual of the direction and control of the public affairs of the city or the county. The question whether a given institution shall be under the direction of the district authority or of the national anthority should be answered, as it appears to us, solely with reference to the purpose and character of the institution itself. As we have already shown, there are less than 30 strictly federal prisoners out of more than 1,400 prisoners of the District of Columbia. All the others have committed crimes which properly can only be considered as local offenses. All these prisoners are supported at the expense of the District of Columbia, for the taxes paid upon government property are a part of the funds of the District in the same sense and upon the same principle as are the taxes paid upon other property in the District.

The advantages that would follow from the adoption of the rule which we are now advocating would be many.

upon the same principle as are the taxes paid upon other property in the District.

The advantages that would follow from the adoption of the rule which we are now advocating would be many. An illustration lies close at hand. At present the jail is under the practical direction and control of the Attorney-General, while the workhouse is under that of the District. Upon the workhouse grounds are buildings which at times might be used for the accommodation of inmates of the jail if the two institutions were under the same head. It does seem unreasonable that such a state of things should exist, for while it is possible in the course of time to bring about arrangements between the local authorities and the federal, such arrangements do take time, and while they are being waited for great inconvenience and loss may result. We are therefore of the opinion that the penitentiary prisoners, as well as the others, ought to be under the direction and control of district authority.

But there is another fact to be considered, namely, that in Leaven-worth and Atlanta the United States Government has in process of construction two magnificent penal institutions. In them it is investing millions of dollars. For a long time to come they will be able to accommodate not only all strictly federal prisoners from the whole United States, but all our local prisoners who ought to be confined in a penitentiary.

OUR RECOMMENDATION.

OUR RECOMMENDATION.

In view of this fact, we believe that good judgment and sound economy require that for the present our penitentiary prisoners should be sent to these institutions, under proper arrangements to be made between the District authorities and the Department of Justice. The fact that our prisoners are serving their terms in these places ought not, however, to prevent the application to their cases of laws to be passed by Congress providing for their release upon parole if a parole system shall be adopted for our own prisoners in general.

6. A PAROLE LAW

One crying evil of the present system of dealing with our prisoners is that when they are released from confinement there is little to prevent their going back to a life of crime. It seems absurd that year after year the Government should be turning back upon society its vowed and inveterate enemies, yet there is no doubt that this is

THE PROFESSIONAL CRIMINAL.

Men who have spent their lives in crime, who have deliberately chosen to lead such a life, are released and leave the prison gates with the declared intention of continuing their warfare against the State. One such prisoner when appealed to by the warden to change his course replied that he had carefully calculated the chances and had reached the conclusion that he could not afford to give up the trade of crime. "I know," he said, "that I must pass a considerable part of my life in prison, but I shall be able to live upon the fruits of my enterprise while I am out of prison enough better to make up for the time I am confined. On the average I shall have a better time." It ought to be a crime in itself to be a professional criminal. There ought to be a statute defining the offense. It occurs to us that the definition should be "A professional criminal is one who has deliberately chosen to lead a life of crime and who has been more than once convicted of a felony." A person convicted of being a professional criminal ought to be sentenced to imprisonment for life. The question whether he is a professional criminal ought to be determined by the jury under a proper charge in the indictment. It will be necessary to distinguish between professional criminals, and habitual criminals, for there are men and women who under the stress of temptation may fall again and again, and yet again and again repent. Their offenses are usually petty and they have not that express determination to get their living by criminal means, which should be held to be a distinguishing characteristic of the professional criminal.

ADVANTAGE TO THE GOVERNMENT FROM A PAROLE SYSTEM.

ADVANTAGE TO THE GOVERNMENT FROM A PAROLE SYSTEM.

No argument is necessary to show that if the Government could in some way retain its hold upon its prisoners after they are released from confinement it would be a distinct advantage to the public. Everyone knows that when a prisoner comes back to the community he is looked upon with suspicion and often finds it all but impossible to win back the confidence of his fellows. Often it is impossible for him to obtain employment, and necessity itself may tempt, if it does not drive him to his old course. Something has been done here and there by associations formed to assist and relieve discharged prisoners, but it would be much better and more effectual if it could be supervised by the Government itself and as a part of the prison discipline. When a man has served out his sentence to the limit and is entitled to his discharge he goes out a free man, but if he is released before the end of his term, upon his own application, under a parole, with conditions which have been imposed to prevent his falling into evil ways, the situation is entirely different. Then he goes out under the supervision of authority, his whereabouts are known, his subsequent course is followed, he is helped to obtain employment, and if he breaks the conditions of his parole he is brought back to prison. We think that in the case of the parole system, just as in the case of the probation system, the chief argument to be considered in its favor is not the chance that now and then a criminal may be reformed, and thereby a philanthropic duty be performed by the State, but that the State will by this means protect itself against the depredations of those who have a tendency toward crime and will be able to strengthen the forces of order at the expense of the forces that oppose it.

A PAROLE BOARD.

Somewhere there should be ledged the suthority to decide whether of the forces that oppose it.

A PAROLE BOARD.

Somewhere there should be lodged the authority to decide whether a prisoner who has served a substantial portion of his term may be released upon parole, not merely with advantage to himself, but with advantage to the State. This authority should be at liberty to impose such restrictions and conditions upon the freedom and occupation of the paroled prisoner and require from him such reports and proofs of lawful conduct as reason, prudence, and justice may dictate in each case. Such authority should, in our opinion, be vested not in the courts but in the executive department. It is administrative rather than judicial work. It belongs in one view to the discipline of the prison, for a paroled person is still restrained of his liberty.

PRISONERS' EARNINGS—A FUND FOR THEIR FAMILIES OR THEMSELVES.

PRISONERS' EARNINGS—A FUND FOR THEIR FAMILIES OR THEMSELVES.

Allusion has heretofore been made to the wisdom and justice of setting apart for the benefit of the prisoner's family, or for the benefit of the prisoner himself upon his release, a substantial part of his earnings. Such a fund as that could evidently be better managed in connection with a parole system than without it. It has sometimes happened, where this plan of paying prisoners a portion of their earnings upon release has been adopted, that large amounts have been paid to the departing convict, who has squandered it all in a single night's debauch. That might be prevented even without a parole system by providing that the fund so reserved should not be paid to the prisoner all at once, but in periodical installments. But under the parole system it would be much easier and simpler to control the disposition of such a fund. In some institutions there is reserved for the prisoner only the miserable pittance of 3½ cents a day, and out of the small sum accumulated in this manner he must pay for the ticket and suit of clothes which are furnished him when he leaves. United States prisoners are provided with one plain suit of clothes, with $5 in money, and with a ticket to their home or the place of conviction. (R. S. Supp., vol. 1, p. 89.) In other institutions the allowance is so liberal that at the end of a long term men have gone out with $600 or $700 of their own. It seems to us it would be at once prudent and practicable to fix an arbitrary amount as the fair price of the prisoner's day's work, and then to charge it against the expense of his maintenance, including therein a round percentage, say 20 per cent, of the total wage as interest upon the capital invested in the plant. Let this fund accumulate during the prisoner's confinement, unless it shall be paid to his family in necessity at home, and be turned over to him in installments after his release. PRISONERS' EARNINGS-A FUND FOR THEIR FAMILIES OR THEMSELVES,

MARYLAND.

MARYLAND.

In the Maryland Penitentiary, in 1906 and 1907, prisoners earned for themselves $41,682.62, a single prisoner earning in the course of a year over $600. In 1906, $18,000 was paid out of the earnings of prisoners for the support of their families and $12,000 was paid to the prisoners themselves upon their discharge. The plan also exists in other institutions, whose authorities mention it with favor.

THE PAROLE SYSTEM HAS THE SUPPORT OF THOSE BEST QUALIFIED TO JUDGE.

We have found that the parole law has won the favor and support of prison officials generally. The warden of the United States penitentiary at Atlanta have both put themselves on record as believing in the principle and hoping for its adoption. In none of the States where it has been adopted has it been made applicable to murder in the first or second degree. Such cases may best be left to the pardoning power inherent in the executive.

It may safely be said that the beneficent character of parole statutes has been established, that opinions in their favor are well-nigh unanimous, and that the States which have tried them longest are their foremost advocates. The committee of the American Bar Association declares that its general investigation is amply sufficient to justify it in reporting that the parole laws in operation are working beneficially and that the committee "deems their wise execution and extension to be in the interests of sound public policy and the prisoner."

A PAROLE BOARD-HOW IT SHOULD BE CONSTITUTED.

A PAROLE BOARD—HOW IT SHOULD BE CONSTITUTED.

The question to be determined by the authority vested with the power to parole is not a question which can be determined upon any mere system of marks or bookkeeping in the prison. It goes deeper than that. It concerns the disposition of the prisoner and his whole attitude toward life. The determination of such a question ought not to be left to a single official, but would more wisely be vested in a board, so constituted as to insure a conservative and yet an unprejudiced hearing. The case should be heard upon application by the prisoner seeking the parole, which application should be required to be made in a prescribed form. It should have the indorsement of the superintendent or warden of the institution where the prisoner is confined, and the test should be whether there is a reasonable probability that the interests of the public, no less than of the prisoner, would best be served by his return to the community.

The liberation of a prisoner on parole ought never to be confounded with the allowance which is made him by statute on account of his perfect deportment in prison. That allowance, called "good time," belongs to him by reason of his compliance with the rules of the institution. He may keep all those rules from purely selfish motives and yet be at heart as criminal as ever. Something more than such deportment must be required to convince a parole board that the interests of the public require his release, and yet some such board is the only tribunal which can competently deal with such a question. Certainly the court can not deal with it when it imposes the sentence. No judge, however wise and farseeing, can possibly foretell when, if ever, a point of time will be reached at which the convict may safely be set free. The most he can do is to see that a sentence is imposed which shall be roughly commensurate with the grade of the offense and serve as a proper warning to others.

ALL DEPENDS ON HOW THE LAW IS ADMINISTERED.

ALL DEPENDS ON HOW THE LAW IS ADMINISTERED.

The success of the parole system depends largely upon how it is administered. In the States where this system has been adopted approximately 10 per cent of those serving sentence become eligible for this conditional liberation each year. It is reasonable to suppose that an equal number of District prisoners would go into this class. All prisoners on parole remain in the legal custody and control of the authorities of the institution from which they have been released until the expiration of the full term specified in their sentences. The conditions upon which they are paroled require that they shall have employment; that they shall avoid evil associations; live an orderly life and abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage; other conditions peculiar to the individual or his case may be imposed. Supervision under these circumstances must be systematic, and requires care and intelligence on the part of the authorities having the cases in charge.

With the jail, the workhouse, and a reformatory maintained by the District under the methods hereinbefore recommended, the management and control of these institutions should be vested in a single head appointed by and responsible to the District Commissioners. This officer should have some such title as "commissioner of correction." He should be chairman of a board to be known as a "board of management and parole," consisting of himself and two other members, one of whom should be one of the District Commissioners, and the other a prominent citizen of the District, the latter serving without pay. Besides passing upon cases of parole, this board should constitute an advisory council to the commissioner of correction in the management of these institutions. It would take charge of all moneys earned by prisoners while in confinement, and under rules and regulations disburse the same to the prisoners' families, and to the prisoners themselves while on parole, or even after their full terms have expired. In passing upon all applications for parole care should

This class should be completely identified and the justice of their detention fully established. To this end there should be kept and classified the measurements of all sentenced prisoners. Bureaus for this purpose are maintained in many of the States, and are carried on with success. The United States also conducts a bureau of criminal identification and exchanges records with officials of state institutions. These records consist of photographs and description cards of the anthropometric system, known as the "Bertillon system," and also what are known as "finger-print records." Since 1895, through the aid of these records, the Department of Justice has successfully identified over 1,900 criminals who have been convicted and sentenced more than once, Such a system would be invaluable in administering the parole law in the District.

the District.

When a reformatory and a new workhouse shall have been established on the lines here recommended, a parole law should be enacted in accordance with the principles above set forth and should embrace, as we believe, a system of credits to prisoners on account of their

SOME QUESTIONS NOT DISCUSSED.

There are many questions concerning the construction of buildings to be used for penal and correctional purposes and concerning the proper cells for such institutions, as well as many details of prison discipline and management, which are left unnoticed in this report, not because we have not formed opinions thereon, but because we do not wish to becloud the questions which demand immediate answer by a lengthy discussion of matters which may be settled after the first necessary steps shall have been taken.

LAND SHOULD BE PURCHASED AT ONCE AND JAIL PRISONERS PUT TO WORK IN THE SPRING.

To the end that the jail may be immediately relieved of the maintenance of prisoners in idleness and that the inmates of the workhouse may all be employed, we recommend that an appropriation be made at the present Congress which will enable the Commissioners of the District to purchase separate tracts of land as sites for a reformatory and a new workhouse and for plans and specifications for the buildings to be erected thereon. If this plan shall be adopted, all those idle sentenced prisoners may be put to work with the opening of the coming spring. So strongly do we believe in the necessity of immediate action that we have taken the liberty of submitting herewith a draft of a bill for the purpose. (Exhibit G.)

A DETENTION HOME FOR JUVENILES.

Our attention has been called to the need of a home for the detention of children awaiting trial in the juvenile court. We submit herewith a letter from the judge of that court, the Hon. William H. De Lacy, setting forth the reasons for such a home, and without recommending any particular site therefor indorse the general plan outlined by him.

CONDITIONS PECULIAR TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

As we have already pointed out, almost all of the offenses to be dealt with here are such offenses as, when they are committed in the several States, are punishable under the state laws.

CRIME AND THE COLORED RACE.

States, are punishable under the state laws.

CRIME AND THE COLORED RACE.

A large proportion of them are committed by colored people. With substantially one-third of the population, they contribute to the various criminal institutions more than three-fourths of the whole number there confined. This fact is not referred to by way of reflecting upon the colored people, for whose condition we, as members of the white race, hold ourselves in no small measure to blame, but as a fact necessary to be considered in dealing with the questions before us. It would not be just to the colored race, however, to leave the above statement unexplained. We must take into account not only the number of crimes committed by the respective races, but the character of those crimes as well. When we consult the records of the jail for the past five years we discover several things which ought to be duly weighed by all impartial persons. We find that two-thirds of all the persons committed to the jail are charged with assaults, not including assaults with intent to kill. Of these assaults a very large proportion, in fact more than five-sixths, are committed by colored people. Of all persons committed for fornification seven-eights are colored. Of all those committed for petty larceny more than three-fourths are colored. Of those committed for larceny from the person, not amounting to robbery, nearly all are colored; that is to say, 28 out of a total of 31. On the other hand, the number committed for grand larceny is almost equally divided between the two races. Among those committed for embezzlement there are almost twice as many whites as blacks. Among those committed for obtaining property by false pretenses the whites are nearly three to one. For robbery, there were committed 139 whites as against only 80 blacks. The fair deduction seems to be that the crimes most common among negroes are crimes of cunning or of boldness—the more daring crimes and larger thefts. The criminal instincts of the colored people are such as belong to the

A REFORMATORY IN ITS RELATION TO THE COLORED PEOPLE.

A REFORMATORY IN ITS RELATION TO THE COLORED PEOPLE.

To those who believe that the negro is incapable of mechanical skill or ingenuity and unworthy of manual training, the fact that so large a proportion of our prisoners are colored might be an argument against the introduction of varied forms of labor into the reformatory, and, perhaps, an argument against the establishment of a reformatory at all. It is highly probable that a large majority of those who would be candidates for a reformatory in this District would belong to the colored race. Having little doubt upon this point, we have been especially interested to learn, from the experience of other jurisdictions where reformatories have been established, what results have been obtained among negroes, and what we have learned has been decidedly in their favor. In some institutions the most skillful workmen have been negroes, and the answers from reformatory and prison officials which have been given to our questions upon this subject have been to the effect that shiftless and awkward specimens of this people are transformed by the discipline and training to competent and often to highly efficient workmen. Our investigation has convinced us that it is a mistake to consider the negro race as incapable of mechanical skill and progress. On the contrary, we believe that one of the strongest arguments in favor of the establishment of a reformatory in this District is that it will serve the purpose of a training school for young colored men who otherwise would never receive any discipline or training whatever. Those who can not be successfully employed in tasks requiring mechanical skill may be put to work upon the land or employed in the heavier forms of labor. The return to daily life of a large number of young colored men who have been so trained in a reformatory that they can immediately command good wages and establish for themselves decent homes will be an example which, in our opinion, will not be lost upon others of their race. It seems little less than a m

BETTER CONDITIONS SHOULD BE PROVIDED FOR THE POOR.

BETTER CONDITIONS SHOULD BE PROVIDED FOR THE POOR.

The problem of crime among these people can not be considered apart from the general problem of their housing and their surroundings. It is impossible to understand any man apart from his surroundings, and especially apart from what he calls his home. Most of these people who find their way into the criminal court and eventually into prison may be traced back to the miserable alleys and hovels which exist in such large numbers in our city and which are a reproach to our civilization. No one who knows how these people live wonders at their habits or their crimes. While we are striving for penal and reformatory institutions worthy of our people and our time, let us not neglect to remove these breeding places of vice and schools of crime, and to put in their place clean and wholesome dwellings. Let us throw the alley open to the light of day; and let us plant where they are most needed the parks and breathing places, wholesome with sun and air and beautiful with trees and flowers, which may appeal to the purer and better instincts of the people. Washington ought not to be in one part a show place and in the other part a loathsome alley. It ought to be in every part clean and habitable. As you yourself have expressed it, Mr. President, let us not lavish all our expenditures upon Fifth avenue; let us give a little attention to the East Side.

PLANS OF THE PARK COMMISSION.

The question of the removal of the workhouse from its present site should also be considered in connection with those plans to grace and beautify the city which have been outlined by the park commission. A glance at a map of the District on which these plans have been laid down will show that they contemplate a driveway along the western bank of the Anacostia River, which would necessarily proceed along this very tract which is now dedicated to the punishment of crime, the treatment of contaglous diseases, the cremation of the dead, and a quarantine for the smallpox. We feel that these plans may well be considered as an additional argument in favor of the removal of the workhouse and of the other buildings which would naturally disappear in its wake, although we regard the other reasons which we have given for its removal as entirely sufficient in themselves.

SCOPE OF THE REPORT.

If it shall seem to you, Mr. President, that in some portions of our report we have gone somewhat far afield, our reason is that the problem presented has seemed to us to be of such magnitude and to involve such far-reaching consequences that it could not be wisely solved without looking to the future, as well as to the present; without considering the probable growth of the city, as well as its present needs; without considering those new and better methods of dealing with prisoners which have been successfully adopted in many States; without, in short, considering the whole penal system of the District, both as it is and as it ought to be; and without taking note of the conditions which produce crime and whose removal it is possible and practicable for us to secure. The system we are invited to propose is a system for the District of Columbia, the seat of the National Government. The capital of a nation, though it lie at the level of the sea, is a city set on a hill—it can not be hid. Whether we wish it or not, it will be observed of all observers, and its influence will go out for good or for evil in every direction and possibly to every nook and corner of the land. We wish to see a system adopted which may become a model to all who are seeking to improve their own institutions and policies and which shall be worthy to form a part of the law of a wise and just people.

You may remember, sir, that Plutarch relates this anecdote of certain ambassadors from Sparta: When asked whether their proposals were offered in their own name as individuals or in the name of the state, they replied: "In the name of the state, if we succeed; if we fail, in our own." In the same spirit we leave this report in your hands.

Very respectfully,

Wendell P. Staffford,
JNO. JOY EDSON,

WENDELL P. STAFFORD, JNO. JOY EDSON, ROBERT V. LA DOW, Commissioners.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure. Mr. JOHNSTON. I want to ask the Senator from Georgia if these institutions are used for the confinement of those who have been arrested but not tried?

Mr. CLAY. They are. Mr. JOHNSTON. And also for those who have been sentenced?

Mr. CLAY. That is what this report says-I have it here and I will send it to the Senator if he desires to read it—that those who are arrested and can not give bond are lodged in jail. After a man is tried, if he is only sentenced-for one year, he is sent to this jail and confined in one of its cells until he serves out that term.

It is a bad system, I insist, that mixes up those that have been convicted and sentenced with those that are awaiting trial. man is presumed in law to be innocent of an offense until he is convicted. He ought not to be placed in a class with those convicted and sentenced until after his conviction.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I quite agree with the Senator that this condition ought not to exist, but there is another question I want, while on the floor, to ask of the Senator in charge of the bill. I note that the bill says:

One of said tracts shall be used as a site for the construction and erection of a reformatory of sufficient capacity to accommodate at least 1,000 prisoners, and the other for the construction and erection of a workhouse of sufficient capacity to accommodate at least 500 prisoners.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Probably the Senator from Alabama was not in when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] moved to change the word "prisoners," where it first occurs, to "inmates." In the second instance the word "prisoners" will remain, I judge, because the two classes are entirely different.
Mr. JOHNSTON. That amendment, I think, was in regard to an entirely different institution.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it was right in this connection. Mr. JOHNSTON. Did not the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska apply to the inmates of a hospital?
Mr. GALLINGER. No; to inmates of the reformatory.

Mr. TILLMAN. On page 86, line 6.
Mr. JOHNSTON. The amendment of the Senator from Ne braska applied to a previous paragraph.

Mr. TILLMAN. Am I mistaken about this? Will the Senator from Nebraska please inform us on what page was his amendment that was agreed to?

Mr. BURKETT. On page 86, line 7, I offered an amendment to change the word "prisoners" to "inmates." That was adopted.

Mr. TILLMAN. It was accepted.
Mr. GALLINGER. It was adopted.
Mr. JOHNSTON. That would fit the case of any prisoner.
Mr. TILLMAN. In a reformatory. You do not consider a boy who has stolen an apple, or something of that sort, a criminal. You do not want to make a hardened criminal of him by confining him with older and meaner men. While he is a prisoner in a sense, he is not a prisoner in the mean sense. He is merely sent there to try to bring him up properly and make a different boy of him.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not object to the word at all. There is, however, another matter I desire to address myself to, and that is this: We have a population here in the city of Washington of about 300,000. This amendment provides for convicts to the number of 1,500. I desire to say that that seems to me entirely too large a number. In the State of Alabama, where there are 2,000,000 inhabitants, there are only about 2,500 convicts confined in the state institutions victs confined in the state institutions.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I would suggest to him that while the provision may seem at this time in excess of the number of prisoners, the city is rapidly growing and the number of criminals here is immense. I have been somewhat familiar with the reports of the chief of police on this subject. A former District Commissioner declared before the District Committee that the criminal classes of Washington were second to those in no other city in the world, or, certainly, in this country. It seems to be a harbor of refuge for a large number of derelict scoundrels who roam in here from Virginia and other Southern States, as well as from the Northern States. They find this such a good field for snatching women's purses and doing other dark and dirty things that it is a favorite place for them to come. Besides, the country is growing, and if we make the institutions too large it will be better to have them empty than to have four or five prisoners in a cell like they have across here on the river, nosing each other like sheep in a pen ready for slaughter.

Mr. JOHNSTON. In spite of what the Senator says about the very large increase of the criminal class here, certainly it ought not to exceed Alabama, with 2,000,000 people, in the number of criminals.

Mr. TILLMAN. The contrast is altogether to the credit of Alabama. I judge the Senator is trying to make that point, and I agree with him entirely that our people of the South are less criminal than they are up this way. [Laughter.]
Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest to the Senator from Ala-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Hampshire? Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest that there are at the present time 600 prisoners in our jail.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Are they convicts-men who have been sentenced?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should judge most of them are convicts. The report of the commission says:

At the writing of this report there are confined in the jall substantially 600 persons. Of these the number awaiting trial or awaiting sentence or awaiting the result of their appeal from the sentence of the trial court is a few over 100. All the others, nearly 500, are serving sentence

It was thought desirable, in view of the fact that this city is going to expand in population—it can not expand in area—so rapidly, that it would be wise in constructing these inexpensive buildings to make the jail large enough to accommodate 1,000 prisoners at some future time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I agree with that; but we have provided here for 1,500-three times the number now under sentence.

Mr. GALLINGER. About twice as many.
Mr. JOHNSTON. It seems to me, in the present condition of the Treasury and the constant falling off in the revenues, that we ought to have some care about how much money we expend here. I am in hearty sympathy with the effort to remedy existing conditions, but I do not think it necessary to provide for 1,500 prisoners, or inmates, or convicts, or whatever you may call them, if there are now only 500.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is mistaken. There are 500 in the jail, and at the workhouse there is a very large number in addition. The present number of inmates at the workhouse is 400. On some days it has been 600. So that there would be ten or eleven hundred at the present time, and the amendment makes provision for fifteen hundred.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I did not know that there was such a large number. The fact is that there are now about half as many convicts in this District as there are in the whole State of Alabama.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. As I understand the Senator, there are from eleven to twelve hundred already in prison.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the jail and the workhouse. Mr. SMITH of Maryland. And this amendment provides accommodations for a number only 400 in excess of that? Mr. GALLINGER. Four or five hundred; that is all,

Mr. TILLMAN. In that connection, Mr. President, it has occurred to me to make an inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, if he will kindly give me his attention. Last winter, when the negroes began to snatch purses from ladies on the street and assault them, even on Connecticut avenue

Mr. GALLINGER. Negroes and white men who blacked

Mr. TILLMAN. And white men, too. I recall that I introduced what was rather a drastic and perhaps satisfactory va-grant bill, and it passed the Senate without any obstruction or ojection. What has become of that bill?
Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will have to inquire at the objection.

other end of the Capitol.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am inquiring of the other end of the Capitol now in the RECORD, because it will soon be, if certain proposed changes to the rules are made, that we can not mention the House of Representatives without getting on our knees, or something like that.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I had in view.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I simply want to know if that bill, which we passed here, ever became a law.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not become a law, I will say to Mr. TILLMAN. Can the Senator give any explanation or guess as to why not?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not been a Member of the other

House for lo these many years.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought the Senator's affiliations with some of those who are in charge of such legislation at the other end-members of the District Committee, for instance-might enable him to jog them up so that they would take the bill out of the pigeonhole.

I notice that in the last three or four weeks we have had purse snatching resumed. The industry is going on; and I merely make this inquiry with a view to calling the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that if we should get the other House into action toward giving relief to the people of this District, we might have a considerable increase in the population of these two reformatories or workhouses, or whatever they are to be, by putting there some of the vagrants from Virginia, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, West and other places that are floating into Washington. Therefore the Senator from Alabama had better not be "penny wise and pound foolish" in providing for the criminal classes, because if the automobiles continue to increase here, according to my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], we shall have a substantial increase of criminals.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina that the population here is about 300,000, and more than one-half of it, as I understand, consists of white people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Two-thirds.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Two-thirds. Now, in Alabama there are more white people than there are colored, and yet the inmates of the penitentiary are about 300 white men to twenty-two or twenty-three hundred colored men. So that if that ratio of criminals should prevail in Washington we should have many less, because of the greater proportion of white people in this

Mr. BACON. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to one feature. I suppose from the terms of the amendment the anticipation is that the work will be proceeded with immediately. For the purpose of gaining information, I want to call the attention of the Senator to a matter which has doubtless been considered by his committee, and that is the necessity that there shall be consent on the part of either Virginia or Maryland to the acquisition of this property and to the establishing of these institutions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I have been informed from sources that I regard as authoritative that there are already in the statutes of both Maryland and Virginia provisions whereby the Government can purchase land in those States. Am I correct, I will ask the Senator from Maryland, so far as his State is concerned?

Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator is talking about the constitutional provision, it gives the right to acquire all needful buildings. There will be no trouble about that. Whether or not there is a general statute, I do not know.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt in the world that the State would give the power, if it has not already done so by statutory enactment, but as I understand the other statutes in regard to the acquisition of property and the construction of buildings, it will be necessary that the jurisdiction be ceded to the United States Government. I can not now lay my hand upon the statute. I could, of course, by delaying a little while, which it is not necessary to do. But I think there is a general statute which would require such cession.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me for a moment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. The Constitution provides that there must be a cession, and after "arsenals, dockyards," as I recollect it, it uses the words "other needful buildings." There would not be the slightest trouble about it. I think my colleague will agree with me on that. It is a constitutional provision. I may be wrong about it.

Mr. BACON. I am not anticipating any difficulty, but I am simply addressing my remarks to the question whether it is practicable to proceed immediately, or whether it is necessary to have first such proceedings as will vest the jurisdiction in the United States.

I further ask the attention of the Senator to the question whether it is important to incorporate in this bill-Congress is going to adjourn-such a provision as may look to the acquisition of the jurisdiction, and to provide the necessary steps for that purpose.

Mr. RAYNER. I have found the provision, if the Senator will allow me for a moment. Subsection 17 of Article I gives the Congress the right-

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say to the learned Senator from New Hampshire that my object in calling attention to this is not simply for information, but to ask whether it is not important that in this bill there shall be such provision as is necessary in order to give practical effect to the legislation which is now proposed.

I desire to say for myself that upon the statements made by the Senator from New Hampshire and my colleague from Georgia, I am most heartily in favor of the proposed enactment.

I think it not only highly important, but obligatory.

Mr. GALLINGER. In a recent interview which I had with Judge Stafford, chairman of this commission, and a very learned lawyer, this very question was gone over. I suggested to him as a layman that I had an impression that a cession would have to be made on the part of the States to the Federal Government. His reply was that he felt sure there would be no trouble about that; that he had investigated it somewhat; that the legislatures were in session at the present time in both States, and his information led him to believe that they would readily and speedily make the cession.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt of that, but the question I wish to suggest to the Senator is whether or not it is important to incorporate in this bill some provision which shall make it practicable to acquire that consent. The legislature of Maryland and the legislature of Virginia will not of their own motion proceed to legislate. There will have to be some communication by this Government to the legislatures indicating a desire that there shall be such legislation. It seems to me there should be a few words incorporated—I am not prepared to suggest what they shall be-which shall confer the authority upon some official to be designated to request such cession from either legislature.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator's observation impresses me as being a very wise one. I am not myself capable of making such an amendment, not being a lawyer. I suggest to the Senator that the provision be adopted and that the Senator, before the bill gets into the Senate, prepare a suitable amendment, and I certainly shall not resist it. I think it is a very wise proposed amendment.

Mr. BACON. I suggest that the form of the amendment may be readily found in a great many instances where we have made provision for the erection of public buildings. In each such case proper provision is made for the acquisition of land and for the cession of jurisdiction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will have some one-I do not know that I can give the time to it-

Mr. CLAY. If my colleague will permit me, I think most of the States have a general statute providing that when the National Government shall make purchases of land for public buildings or other purposes, this right shall be conceded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was informed that in the States of Virginia and Maryland such statutes were on the books.

Mr. MARTIN. So far as Virginia is concerned, there is a general statute that answers all of the demands of the Constitution and of the federal law, and there is no need to insert anything in this bill, nor is there any need to get anything from the State of Virginia in addition to what exists now. It has been amply covered and has been acted upon.

Mr. BACON. If a similar law exists in Maryland, then it is not necessary that anything should be incorporated on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I requested Mr. La Dow to make an investigation of this matter, and he reported to me that there would be no trouble in either State. That is all I know of it.

Mr. BACON. I suppose, under the statement made by the Senator from Virginia and upon the assurance given by one in whose judgment the Senator from New Hampshire has confidence, it will not be necessary to insert anything.

But in addition to the information which has been given, which is entirely satisfactory as to Virginia, I hope that before the bill goes out of conference there will be a thorough investigation of the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall certainly attend to that, I assure the Senator from Georgia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 87, line 25, after the word "thousand," to insert "two hundred;" in line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred;" in line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred and sixty" and insert "seven hundred and eighty;" in line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "seven hundred and twenty;" and in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fourteen thousand seven hundred. word "dollars," to strike out "fourteen thousand seven hundred and twenty" and insert "sixteen thousand four hundred and eighty," so as to make the clause read:

Board of Charities: For secretary, $3,000; clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $1,200; messenger, $600; 1 inspector, $1,200; 6 inspectors, at $900 each; 1 driver, at $780; 3 drivers, at $720 each; hostler, $540; traveling expenses, $400; in all, $16,480.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why this amendment is necessary. Is it desirable to have extraordinary men for service as drivers? Can we not get them for $600 in the District?

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee may be wrong, but the committee is of opinion that in these days of high prices for everything a family wears and consumes, a man with a family must live at a poor, dying rate at $50 a month in the city of Washington, and for that reason it made a very slight increase in the salaries of these men. Letters were received from some of them showing what their expenses were and how poorly they were compelled to live, which appealed to the committee, and the committee, in its kindness of heart, made this slight increase.

Mr. JOHNSTON. All right. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Reformatories and correctional institutions," on page 88, line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "and eighty" and insert "two hundred;" in line 14, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred;" in line 15, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" and in line 16, before the word "overseers," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "sixteen," so as to read:

For Washington Asylum: For superintendent, $1,800; visiting physician, $1,200; resident physician, $480; clerk, $840; property clerk, $1,200; baker, $600; principal overseer, $1,500; 16 overseers, at $660 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the Washington Asylum, on page 89, line 8, to increase the appropriation for trained nurse, who shall act as superintendent of nursing, from $720 to $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 1, to increase the total appropriation for the force at the Washington Asylum from $38,176 to $39,636.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "sixty-two," so as to make the clause read:

For provisions, fuel, forage, harness and vehicles and repairs to same, gas, ice, shoes, clothing, dry goods, tailoring, drugs and medical supplies, furniture and bedding, kitchen utensils, and other necessary items, $62,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the "Home for the Aged and Infirm," on page 91, line 14, to increase the number of servants at $144 each from 2 to 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 16, to increase the total appropriation for the force at the Home for the Aged and Infirm from $13,848 to $13,992.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 21, before the word thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For provisions, fuel, forage, harness and vehicles and repairs to same, gas, ice, shoes, clothing, dry goods, tailoring, drugs and medical supplies, furniture and bedding, kitchen utensils, and other necessary items, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 24, before the word thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to make the clause read:

For repairs and improvements to buildings and grounds, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 92, to strike out: For expenses of procuring milk, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

And insert:

For installing a dairy, including the erection of buildings, purchase of cattle, and the necessary fixtures for the same, $2,500.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if they have considered whether it is better to install a dairy there, and whether they can not get their milk cheaper otherwise?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that they have a large farm. This is at Blue Plains, on the banks of the Potomac below St. Elizabeth's Hospital, where the Government purchased, I think, between two and three hundred acres of land, and we have now two institutions on that land. There is a chance to raise practically all that would be consumed by the inmates. I was down there last year, at the time I was investigating the hospitals and charitable institutions of the District, and I found two sickly looking cows there. That was the extent of the herd. They were buying milk to a very large amount, and it occurred to me then, and I suggested to the su-perintendent, that if he would ask Congress to make an approprintendent, that it is to establish a dairy there would be no objection to it. That was what led to this provision, which I think is a very wise one, I will say to the Senator. I think it is in the line of economy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 5, to insert: For purchase and laying of farm-land drain tile, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 7, to insert: For erection of additional building for male inmates, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 10, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the Home for the Aged and Infirm from $37,848 to $54,492.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 8, before the word "dollars," to insert "one hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For repairs to Columbia Hospital, $2,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with the National Homeopathic Hospital Association, etc., on page 94, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert the following provise:

Provided, That the limitation of time fixed in the provision to the appropriation for the relief of the National Homeopathic Hospital Association in the District of Columbia appropriation act approved May 26, 1908, is hereby extended to January 1, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 4, to increase the appropriation for emergency care and treatment of, and free dispensary service to, indigent patients under a contract or agreement to be made with the Eastern Dispensary by the Board of Charities from $6,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 14, on page 95

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President-

Mr. GALLINGER. While the agreement was that only committee amendments should now be considered, the Senator from Colorado has an amendment the committee would offer if he did not, and I hope the agreement will be waived, so as to allow the Senator to offer the amendment at this point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be received.

Mr. TELLER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. After line 14, on page 95, it is proposed to insert:

For care and treatment of indigent patients under a contract to be made with the Sibley Hospital by the Board of Charities, $5,000.

Mr. TELLER. I wish for the information of the conference committee to submit a very brief statement in connection with the amendment to go into the Record without reading. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States.

Permit me to ask your consideration of Sibley Hospital, which is located at 1150 North Capitol street, Washington, D. C. We believe that its usefulness is of such quantity and quality as to interest both Houses of Congress when the Members know what it is and what it that its usefulness is of such quantity and quality as to interest both Houses of Congress when the Members know what it is and what is doing.

In 1894, by congressional action, a charter was granted "The National Training School for Missionaries." The institution at that time, in addition to its school, maintained an orphanage and hospital. Soon afterwards the hospital was enlarged by the generous gifts of an honorable citizen of the District of Columbia, W. J. Sibley, and was named "Sibley Hospital" in memory of his wife, who became one of its chief patrons.

It has been maintained without aid other than that received from voluntary gifts of men and women who have some passion for humanity. It is and always has been open to suffering humanity without discrimination as to race, nationality, or religious faith. It is and always has been open to any reputable physician and his patients, barring only those of contagious diseases.

One hundred and eighty-three physicians and surgeons availed themselves of the privileges offered during the last year. One thousand and fifty-three patients were treated by them from July 1, 1907, to July 1, 1908, and 1,514 emergency cases. A free dispensary service is maintained, the only service of the kind in that portion of the city, and annually the free service rendered has been equivalent to $15,000. Much of the time a "deaconess" nurse has given her time to nursing in the homes of the poor and unfortunate.

The hospital maintains 85 beds, and for the past year the daily average of the patients cared for has been 50. It maintains 30 nurses, on the average, for each day of the year. I submit a few of the annual reports, which contain other items of interest.

Believing that the institution is worthy of consideration, I have taken the liberty of stating these facts.

I am. most respectfully,

WILLIAM H. WILDER,

President.

President.

SIBLEY HOSPITAL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

SIBLEY HOSPITAL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

To the Congress of the United States:

Permit us most respectfully to ask your careful consideration of the claims of Sibley Hospital, which is located between Pierce and M, at 1150 North Capitol street, Washington, D. C. We entertain the belief that you will find that its usefulness is of such quantity and quality as to interest you in its purposes and achievements. Therefore we begyou to examine into the statement of facts, which in very brief form sets forth what the hospital stands for, what it is accomplishing, and what it has accomplished.

The title to the property is vested in "The Woman's Home Missionary Society" of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is controlled by a local board of directors of both men and women. By congressional action in 1894 a charter was granted "The National Training School for Missionaries." For some time the unincorporated institution, in addition to its school of training, maintained an orphanage and a hospital. By means of a generous gift from W. J. Sibley, an honorable citizen of this city, the hospital was built and afterwards enlarged and given the name "Sibley Hospital," in memory of Mrs. Sibley, who from the beginning had been one of its chief patrons.

It has been established and maintained wholly by the voluntary contributions of men and women who have some passion for humanity. It is and always has been open to the suffering without discrimination as to race, nationality, or religious faith or practice. It is and always has been open to any reputable physician and his patients, barring only such patients as have chronic or contaglous diseases.

From July 1, 1907, to July 1, 1908, 183 physicians and surgeons availed themselves of the privileges of the hospital. During this period 1,053 patients were treated by them, and in addition thereto the hospital attended to 1,514 emergency cases. A free dispensary service is maintained, the only service of that kind in that portion of the city, and for several years the annual free service unfortunate.

The hospital maintains 85 beds, also a free ward, and for the past year the daily average of the patients cared for has been 50. It maintains on the average 30 nurses for each day in the year. We would be pleased to submit a few of the annual reports, which contain other items of interest.

Permit us also to state that the hospital is purely philanthropical and charitable; that it is established and maintained without any pecuniary profit whatever to its promoters or board of directors; and that it ministers almost wholly to the suffering within the limits of the District of Columbia. Hoping that you will give careful consideration to its work, spirit, methods, and purposes; that having done so, you will recognize its claims in common with those institutions of like alms and work within the District; and that we may have a fair remuneration for the free service rendered and a proportionate share of the moneys appropriated by Congress for hospital purposes.

We most respectfully subscribe ourselves, by the order and in behalf of the local board of directors.

WM. H. WILDER, Superintendent, HENRY FRANCE, Director, J. W. R. QUINWAIT, Director, Committee.

"Nash Hall," the original building, was a gift from Mr. Nash, of Washington. The "Sibley" building was constructed as a cost of about $25,000. The buildings and grounds are valued at about $100,000. An extension is sadly needed to accommodate the patients knocking at the doors. We have just put in a new and larger elevator at a cost of about $4,000. It is yet unpaid for.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to ask the senator from Colorado to explain briefly what this is.

Mr. TELLER. This is a hospital that has been in service for several years without having any appropriation from the Government. One-third of the patients have been free patients. Out of 1,053 cases one-third were served free. The hospital takes all classes and all kinds of people; people of every denomination. I think it is really the most beneficent small char-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to. The reading of the bill was resumed.

parades, rent, fuel, light, heat, care, and repair of armories, practice ships, boats, machinery, and dock, dredging alongside of dock, and for telephone service, $45,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for pay of troops other than government employees, on page 106, line 9, after the word "necessary," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the President of the United States may, upon request of the commanding general, assign an officer of the navy to duty with the National Guard of the District of Columbia, who, while so assigned, shall be commissioned as an officer of the naval battalion and be subject to the orders of the commanding general.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 17, to in-

EXTENSION OF WATER MAINS.

For the extension of water mains in the following localities: Thirty-inch main from Kentucky and Potomac avenues to Twining City, $42,000; 20-inch main from Twining City to Congress Heights, $67,000; and a 20-inch main from Twining City to Benning, $70,000; in all $179,000; said amount to be repaid from the revenues of the water department at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, beginning July 1, 1910.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator in charge of the bill explain the necessity for this item?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say, Mr. President, that the first of these water mains is in close proximity to the navy-yard on two of the avenues that were made when the city was first laid out—Kentucky avenue and Potomac avenue, which was formerly known as "Georgia avenue." It is a thickly settled part of the city and the residents there have no adequate water main. This is a provision to give them what they ought to have had a long Twining City and Congress Heights and Benning are across the river, Twining City being directly across the bridge that spans Pennsylvania avenue east of the Capitol. They are villages of several hundred people each, Benning being quite a lages or several hundred people each, Benning being quite a place, and Congress Heights having been built up very rapidly of recent years. They are inadequately supplied with water mains, so much so that there is a universal protest from the people there. The commissioners, after investigating the matter, recommended that these mains should be provided for. It is one of the necessary improvements in a community such as this.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Water department," on page 107, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "clerk, $1,400;" in line 12, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" and in line 13, after the word each," to insert "2 meter computers, at $1,000 each," so as to make the clause read:

For revenue and inspection branch: For water registrar, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,100; clerk, $1,500; clerk, $1,400; clerk, $1,400; clerk, $1,400 ach; chief inspector, $1,000; 9 inspectors, at $900 each; 10 inspectors, at $800 each; assistant tapper, $825; messenger, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for the distribution branch of the water department, on page 108, line 1, to increase the appropriation for the salary of assistant engineer from $2,100 to $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 1, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the water department from $80,160 to $82,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 6, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses, including books, blanks, stationery, printing, etc., for the water department from $3,500 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 15, after the word "work," to insert "and including a sum not exceeding $500 for the use of bicycles by inspectors of the water department;" and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-two," so as to make the clause

For fuel, repairs to boilers, machinery, and pumping stations, pipe distribution to high and low service, material for high and low service, including public hydrants and fire plugs, and labor in repairing, replacing, raising, and lowering mains, laying new mains and connections, and erecting and repairing fire plugs, and purchase and maintenance of two motor trucks, horses, wagons, carts, and harness necessary for the proper execution of this work, and including a sum not exceeding $500 for the use of bicycles by inspectors of the water department, $42,000.

Mr. JOEINSTON. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what the amendment in lines 15 and 16 means? Does it mean the purchase of bicycles?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that there is an immense waste of water in the District of Columbia. It is so great that it has become almost a scandal, and it is very necessary to have inspectors go from hotel to hotel, house to house, and public building to public building for the purpose of investigating that matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarilylaid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the present time the inspectors have either to hire carriages or to pay railroad fare to make these inspections. It is thought by the commissioners that if $500 is appropriated for the use of bicycles it will be a matter of economy, and the amendment was put in the bill at the instance of the commissioners. That is all I know about it.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The point I asked the Senator was whether the word "purchase" should not be included, because if these people are to be paid $500-

Mr. GALLINGER. For the purchase and use? Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes. I understand the big I understand the bicycles are to be used by the employees, and the bicycles that are to be used will belong to the District government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will be glad to insert the words "purchase and" before the word "use."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire

moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated. The Secretary. In line 16, before the word "use," insert the words "purchase and," so as to read:

For the purchase and use of bicycles by inspectors of the water de-

Mr. JOHNSTON. My idea is that if the District government owns them it will not have to pay for the use thereafter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 21, before the word "to" where it occurs the first time," to insert "for the general use of and," so as to read:

For continuing the extension of and maintaining the high-service system of water distribution, laying necessary service and trunk mains for low service, including a 12-inch main for the general use of and to afford fire protection to the National Training School for Boys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for continuing the extension of and maintaining the high-service system of water distribution, on page 110, line 10, after the word "appropriated," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized, in their discretion, to grant leaves of absence, not exceeding two and one-half days per month, with pay, and pay for legal holidays, to such per diem employees as are appointed specifically and in writing by said commissioners under authority of law and whose services cover a period of three months or more.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is intended to include the employees of the District, or only the employees of the water department?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the purpose of it is to make it general. There are comparatively few per diem employees now. They were mostly put on the salary rolls a year or two ago.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are a few still scattered throughout the District remaining on per diem rolls.

Mr. BURKETT. This is to be general?

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand it to be general.

Mr. BURKETT. Then, I suggest that the paragraph should be amended, either in punctuation or, perhaps, by a change in phraseology. The word "Provided," with a colon preceding phraseology. refers probably only to the rest of the paragraph, and, at most. the way it is put in there it refers only to the water department. I suggest that either the paragraph should go in a new place or perhaps the colon should be stricken out and a period With the colon the proviso attaches only to that inserted. paragraph.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am quite willing to have a period inserted before the word "Provided."

Mr. BURKETT. I suggest that it be passed over so that we may see if it can not go into another place where it will be more general.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, and the Senator will look at He will not have much time to look at it, I suggest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 111, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-nine" and insert "sixty-six," so as to make the paragraph read:

The services of draftsmen, assistant engineers, levelers, transitmen, rodmen, chainmen, computers, copyists, overseers, and inspectors temporarily required in connection with sewer, street, or road work, or the construction and repair of buildings and bridges, or any general or special engineering or construction work authorized by appropriations may be employed exclusively to carry into effect said appropriations when specifically and in writing ordered by the Commissioners of the District; and all such necessary expenditures for the proper execution of said work shall be paid from and equitably charged against the sums appropriated for said work; and the Commissioners of the District in their annual estimates shall report the number of such employees performing such services, and their work, and the sums paid to each, and out of what appropriation: Provided, That the expenditures hereunder shall not exceed $66,000 during the fiscal year 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment was, on page 114, after line 16, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That until and including June 30, 1910, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the general expenses of said District, as authorized by Congress, and to relimburse the Treasury for the portion of said advances payable by the District of Columbia out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government thereof: Provided, That all advances made under this act and under the acts of February 11, 1901, July 1, 1902, March 3, 1903, April 27, 1904, March 3, 1905, June 27, 1906, March 2, 1907, and May 26, 1908, not reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States on or before June 30, 1910, shall be relimbursed to said Treasury out of the revenues of the District of Columbia from time to time, within five years, beginning July 1, 1910, together with interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent per annum on annual balances until so reimbursed: Provided further, That the Auditor for the State and Other Departments and the auditor of the District of Columbia shall each annually report the amount of such advances, stating the account for each fiscal year separately, and also the reimbursements made under this section, together with the balances remaining, if any, due to the United States to bear any part of the cost of acquisition of land for street extensions, and all advances heretofore or hereafter made for this purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be repaid in full from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to ask the Senator from New

Mr. JOHNSTON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if this does not impose an obligation upon the Government of the United States directly to make an indefinite loan for five years to the District of Columbia at 2 per cent? Is not that the effect of it?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the effect of it. It is a provision that has been in every District of Columbia appropriation act since 1901

Mr. JOHNSTON. Was the period of the loan, five years, named in the former acts?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This is the usual form?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the usual form. This municipality has no means of meeting extraordinary expenses as contradistinguished from current expenses. The result has been that they have had to ask the Government to loan them money at a low rate of interest from time to time, to be repaid in annual install-The indebtedness at the present time of the District of ments. Columbia to the Government, I will say to the Senator, is $4,000,000; but they are paying it as rapidly as they can.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill. Mr. GALLINGER. I have a few committee amendments to offer.

On page 79, the paragraph from lines 11 to 19, inclusive, is a committee amendment, which was discussed somewhat yesterday. I have a substitute to offer for it which is acceptable to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston], who objected to the amendment in the form in which it is included in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert in lieu of lines from 11 to 19, inclusive, on page 79, the following:

For necessary expenses of inspection of dairy farms, including amounts that may be allowed to the health officer and assistant health officer, medical inspector in charge of contagious disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for the maintenance of horse and vehicle, or motor vehicle, for use in the discharge of their official duties, not to exceed $365 per annum each, and other necessary traveling expenses, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I want to say that my recollection is that, upon motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], that amount was reduced from $6,000 to $3,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was. Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator from Texas is out of the Chamber just at this moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a substitute for the amendment in the bill as it stands amended at the present time.

Mr. JOHNSTON. But the motion of the Senator from Texas was to strike out the appropriation there of $6,000 and to insert $3,000. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire to wait a few moments until the Senator from Texas returns. Meanwhile let the amendment be passed over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present. On page 6, line 5, the comma after the

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 6, line word "labor" should be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Secretary. On page 6, line 5, after the word "labor," it is proposed to strike out the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 16, line 1, after the word "For," move to insert the words "secretary or."
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 16, line 1, after the word "For," it is proposed to insert the words "secretary or," so as to read:

Automobile board: For secretary or acting secretary of the automobile board, $300.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.
Mr. GALLINGER. On page 29, line 12, after the word "pave," I move to strike out the words "35 feet wide" and to insert "at present width."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 29, line 10, the committee amendment should be amended by adding the words "road or old Fourteenth street road" after the words "Piney Branch."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 65, line 10, after the word seventy-six," the word "and" should be changed to "to." The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 65, line 10, after the word "seventy-six," it is proposed to strike out "and" and to insert "to," so as to read:

For construction of a normal school building on lots 76 to 106.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 16, line 6, after the word "dollars," where it occurs the first time, I move to insert "examiner, $1,500," and a semicolon.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. GALLINGER. On page 16, in line 8, after the word "hire," I move to strike out "one thousand two" and insert "nine."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 16, in line 8, after the word "hire," it is proposed to strike out "one thousand two" and to insert nine," so as to read:

Temporary clerk hire, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 19, in lines 7 and 8 of the committee amendment, the words "purchase and maintenance of transportation vehicles" should be inserted after the word "equipment," in line 9. It is simply a transposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 19, in line 7 of the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out "purchase and maintenance of transportation vehicles," and in line 9, after the word "equipment," it is proposed to insert "purchase and maintenance of transportation vehicles.'

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 33, after line 5, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 5, it is proposed to Northeast: M street, Bladensburg road to Twenty-fourth street, grade, $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Now, if the Senator from Nebraska is Mr. GALLINGER.

ready, I trust he will offer his amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. I suggest that the paragraph on page 110 be inserted on page 114 as a new paragraph, and that the first words, "Provided, That," be stricken out, so that it will be paragraph 6 on page 114, and that paragraphs 6 and 7 may be renumbered 7 and 8; that is, after the other general provision pertaining to the District of Columbia and just before the two paragraphs pertaining to the fiscal system.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if his purpose would not as well be accomplished by striking out the colon, inserting a period, and striking out the word "Provided,"

Mr. BURKETT. Strike out "Provided, That." Yes; if you make it a different and a new paragraph.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will agree to have the colon and the words "Provided, That" on page 110 stricken out and allow it to remain there, I think it would suit my out and and convenience better. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 110, in the committee amendment, on line 10, it is moved to strike out the words "Provided, That;" to spell the word "hereafter" with a capital "H," and to strike out the colon after the word "appropriated" and to insert a period.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama rise to the pending amendment?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I rise to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill if this will not bring into confusion the leaves of absence that are granted to employees of the District of Columbia? I understand that there is a general law which regulates that subject, and now we propose to entirely change it by granting power to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant leaves not exceeding two and a half days per month with pay. Would not that be additional to the leaves they are now allowed?

Mr. GALLINGER. They have no leaves of absence at the present time. These are a few per diem employees, I will say to the Senator from Alabama, and the law applies simply to those who are on the regular rolls. They are granted thirty days' leave of absence; but there are a few per diem employees who are not given any leaves of absence. This amendment simply takes care of those few men.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not think that the clause is clear in confining the provision to per diem employees. I suggest to the Senator that he insert, after the words "grant leaves of absence," the words "to per diem employees."

Mr. BURKETT. The words "per diem employees" are in

Mr. JOHNSTON. I understand. Does the Senator from New Hampshire think those words have the same effect there?
Mr. GALLINGER. I think so. I think the Senator would not improve the provision by changing it in the way he suggests.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The question recurs on the amendment as amended. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I offer another amendment, to come in on page 66, line 26. I move to strike out the words "if feasible."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 26, after the words "outward and," it is proposed to strike out "if feasible," so that the clause will read: School buildings authorized and appropriated for herein shall be constructed with all doors intended to be used as exits or entrances opening outward and each of said buildings having in excess of eight rooms shall have at least four exits.

Mr. BURKETT. There ought not to be erected any school building which contains that many rooms where it is not feasible to have four exits.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I have another amendment which I desire to offer. On page 102, in the provision beginning in line 5, "For Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors," in line 9, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to make the appropriation for this purpose $4,580.

I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that one of the leading officials of the old veterans' organization called to see me and spoke of the extraordinary expense that they would probably be put to this year on account of the inauguration, their going into a new building, and so forth, stating that they had intended to present this to the committee, but had not, and asked me to introduce it for them.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not estimated for and is, I think, subject to a point of order, but I shall not make the point of order, but will let it go into the bill and be considered in

Mr. BURKETT. Let it be considered in conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. And if the Senator will kindly exert his persuasive influence at the other end of the Capitol, it may be

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 102, line 9, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "three" and to insert "four, so as to read:

For Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, namely: For superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360; and cook, $360; maintenance, $4,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. On the same page, in line 10, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "five" and to insert "six," so as to increase the total appropriation for that purpose to $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will at this point, Mr. President, ask that the Secretary be empowered to change the totals throughout the bill. There have been some increases which make the changing of totals necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire

asks unanimous consent that the Secretary be empowered to change the totals throughout the bill where necessary. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that the committee amendments are completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are.
Mr. McCUMBER. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to be inserted on page 33, after line 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 2, it is proposed to Northwest: Pave 30 feet wide Twenty-third street NW. from S street to Kalorama road, and Kalorama road from Twenty-third street to Connecticut avenue, $20,000. Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that that was estimated for, but the committee felt that they had made other additions that seemed to be more important, and so they left it out. But I have no objection to its going into the bill and being considered in conference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

For paving with asphalt Connecticut avenue extended from Macomb street to Newark street, $3,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 29, line 6, I move to amend by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 29, line 6, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty," so as to read:

Northwest: Sixteenth street extended, grade and improve, $20,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection, Mr. President, to that amendment going to conference.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire may have no objection to the amendment, but I should like to know what necessity there is for doubling the appropriation. Probably the Senator from Montana, who proposed the amendment, can enlighten us about it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, Sixteenth street beyond the present improvements has been the subject of considerable comment in the Chamber as these appropriation bills have come in from year to year. The fact is that many years ago citizens of the District, landowners along the line of the street, donated land for a right of way, which was estimated to be worth about a million dollars, with an understanding at the time that the street would be opened and improved to the District line. conveyances of the right of way were made to the District. The right of way is owned by the District, but the improvements have never been made in accordance with the original understanding under which the conveyances were received by the District. A bridge is provided for across what is known as "Piney Branch," which will be completed during the year, and the bridge will be of no value unless the approaches to it are completed. It is the purpose of this amendment to allow a sufficient sum to make the road passable to the bridge and approaches. The sum provided for in the bill as it passed the other House is manifestly inadequate.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. BACON. There seems to be no limitation in the amend-It does not specify to what point the improvement will ment. extend.

Mr. CARTER. There is only one point at which improve-ments have been in progress for many years. There is a very trifling amount of work, as the Senator will recall from personal observation, across what is known as the "Piney Branch," north of Mount Pleasant. The grade there being made will probably occupy the District for many years. The road, although partially built, is impassable, and a detour must now be made to Fourteenth street, or else into Rock Creek Park, in order to get north, inasmuch as the old roadway has been abandoned and rendered impassable by the grade which has been partially built up. The District Commissioners and the engineer in charge will clearly understand that there is only one place in the entire street for the expenditure of this appropriation.

Mr. BACON. The Senator understands, then, that without any more definite specification the appropriation would be understood as being limited to that particular work?

Mr. CARTER. There could scarcely be any misunderstanding about it. The tools and equipment are now upon the ground, and this is merely providing for the prosecution of a work already under way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 79 there is an amendment not yet agreed to. It is an amendment to the amendment of the committee. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston] agreed to the amendment; but he wanted the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to be here before it was acted upon. I ask that it

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 79, in place of the committee amendment beginning in line 11 and ending in line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

For necessary expenses of inspection of dairy farms, including amounts that may be allowed to the health officer and assistant health officer, medical inspector in charge of contagious-disease service, and inspectors assigned to the inspection of dairy farms, for the maintenance of horse and vehicle, or motor vehicle, for use in the discharge of his official duties, not to exceed $365 per annum each, and other necessary traveling expenses, $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think that would cover the point I made.
Mr. CULBERSON. As I understand, the amendment I proposed, to strike out "six" and insert "three," was adopted.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Texas that these men own their horses and vehicles. To give them a dollar a day would amount to $4,745; and then there are other necessary expenses. The $6,000 really ought to be in the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas is correct. His amendment in line 18, striking out "six" and inserting

"three," was agreed to.
Mr. CULBERSON. I understood so.
Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but if this amendment is adopted, it will take the place of the other.

Mr. CULBERSON. Well, I will ask for a vote of the Senate

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GARY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

No expenditures shall be made under appropriations made by this section for gas that contains as much as 20 per cent carbon monoxide.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Committee on the District of Columbia is diligently engaged considering the monoxide question. It will take from a year and a half to two years to change the plants, so that the company can make gas that does not contain more than 10 per cent monoxide, and it will take about $2,000,000 to do it. For us to insert a provision of that kind in this bill would, under existing conditions, simply be an absurdity. It could not be complied with; and yet I suppose the gas company would be liable to prosecution for violating a law that it would be utterly impossible for the company to comply with. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I suggest that the chairman of the District of Columbia Committee might say that that matter is being now considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I made the statement, I will say to the Senator from Maryland, that we are diligently considering it. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. GARY].

The amendment was rejected. Mr. CLAY. On page 5, line 8, I move to strike out "five" and insert "eight." I am inclined to think the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 5, line 8, after the words "one thousand," it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert eight," so as to read:

For care of District building: Clerk and stenographer, $1,800.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that amendment going into conference. It will be inquired into.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 6, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, February 5, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

H. C. LINN AND SAMUEL POWELL.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for to-day the Clerk will read the first bill on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14000) for the relief of H. C. Linn and Samuel Powell.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I shall object

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the consideration of the bill. The Clerk will call the next bill.

BOARD OF EDUCATION, HARPERS FERRY SCHOOL DISTRICT, WEST VIRGINIA. .

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8959) for the relief of the board of education of the Harpers Ferry school district of Jefferson County, W. Va.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object.
Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of my friend. If certain kind of bills in certain localities are to be objected to and other bills for other localities not objected to, we would like to know it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I object.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13476) for the relief of the State of Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WANGER. Is it not in order, notwithstanding the objection made, to move that the House now go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13476? The House was led to believe that that was the case at the time this order was adopted.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order, the Chair believes that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering a particular bill would not be in order, but a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar in order this day under the rule, without regard to the special order, it seems to the Chair would be in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has this bill any business on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not examined it to see. [After examination.] This being for the relief of a State, under the practice, in the opinion of the Chair, it should receive its consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and on suggestion, the attention of the Chair being called to it, under the practice the Chair will order the transfer from the Private Calendar to the calendar of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACON. Does the Chair hold that the right to object can not be reserved, that objection must be immediately made when the bill is presented to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so hold. Of course any debate when a bill is called would be by unanimous consent, and under the practice the Chair, as one Member of the House, would not be called upon to object to something in the nature of an interchange of suggestions between Members. The whole proceeding, where objection is made, is by unanimous consent. The same practice that obtains when bills are submitted to the House for unanimous consent under this order, in the opinion of the Chair, ought to obtain, but so far there has been absolute objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will permit me just a moment, the order provides that it shall be in order in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House to consider all bills on the Private Calendar to the consideration of which no objection is made. Now, must not objection be made to consideration immediately, and as objection is not made then, consideration having begun, objection could not after consideration had been begun be made to further consideration?

The SPEAKER. Of course, an absolute objection would be fatal to the consideration of the bill; but under the practice of the House, in the opinion of the Chair, by unanimous consent, the Chair being a Member of the House, and having the right to object as a Member, he could object, but by unanimous consent there could be a proceeding in the nature of debate to see whether or not a suggestion might not remove the objection if the gentleman withholds it temporarily.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, that is all right; but if consideration is really entered upon, then I think one can not object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MATE WILLIAM JENNEY.

The Clerk reported the bill (H. R. 17059) for the relief of Mate William Jenney, U. S. Navy, retired, and the eight other retired mates who have been placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may lie on the table. A recent ruling of the department has given all that can be given under the bill, and hence there is no necessity for its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon that the bill do lie on the table? [After

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. pause.] The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN T. BROWN.

The Clerk reported the bill (H. R. 1416) for the relief of John T. Brown

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I object. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

SAMUEL SCHIFFER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3351) for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Schiffer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. I object. Mr. HACKNEY. I object.

JOHN H. HAMITER.

The next business was the bill (S. 4024) for the relief of John H. Hamiter.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, ctc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John H. Hamiter, of Lafayette County, Ark., the sum of $3,590.47, the proceeds of the sale of 53 bales of cotton sold by the Government in 1865 and placed in the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the death of the beneficiary and offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 4, after the word "to," the following: "Allen H. Hamiter, administrator of the estate of: "and after the name "John H. Hamiter," in line 1, the word "deceased," so as to read: "Pay to Allen H. Hamiter, administrator of the estate of John H. Hamiter, deceased, of Lafayette County."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended. There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 9006. An act to amend an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved February 18, 1907.

S. 8588. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief. of Dewitt Eastman," approved January 8, 1909; S. 7374. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Astoria, in the State of Oregon; and

S. 8555. An act to relinquish the interest of the United States in and to certain land in Dade County, Fla., to John M. Bryan, jr.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 6252. An act to promote the administration of justice in

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 27051. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned brass or bronze Napoleon gun, carriage, and cannon balls to the State of Iowa.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4535) entitled "An act to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 84.

Resolved by the Senate concurrent resolution 84.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of constructing a ship canal, suitable to meet the demands of commerce, from the most available southerly point of Humboldt Bay to Eel River, in the State of California.

Senate concurrent resolution 80.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the harbor at Lexington, Sanilac County, Mich., with a view to deepening the same to a depth of 20 feet, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7872) to promote the administration of justice in the navy.

SENATE RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following concurrent resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 80.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the harbor at Lexington, Sanilac County, Mich., with a view to deepening the same to a depth of 20 feet, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 84.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made and an estimate submitted of the cost of constructing a ship canal, suitable to meet the demands of commerce, from the most available southerly point of Humboldt Bay to Eel River, in the State of California—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

RICHMOND LIGHT INFANTRY BLUES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8661) for the relief of the Richmond Light Infantry Blues, of Virginia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Richmond Light Infantry Blues, of the State of Virginia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the value of any clothing or other quartermaster supplies belonging to it which may have been taken by the members thereof into the service of the United States in 1898, for service during the war with Spain, worn out, or lost, or destroyed therein through no fault of their own, not to exceed the sum of $3,300.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out, commencing in line 6, after the word "appropriated," the following:

"The value of any clothing or other quartermaster supplies belonging to it which may have been taken by the members thereof into the service of the United States in 1898, for service during the war with Spain, worn out, or lost, or destroyed therein through no fault of their own, not to exceed the sum of $3,300" and insert in lieu thereof—
"the sum of $1,788.48 in full settlement for their claim for clothing and other quartermaster's supplies which were taken by the members thereof into the service of the United States in 1898, during the war with Spain, and worn out, or lost, or destroyed therein through no fault of their own."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

P. H. M'DONOUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13928) for the relief of P. H. McDonough, of Bardstown, Ky.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Patrick Henry McDonough, of Bardstown, Ky., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250, in full payment of the claim of said McDonough against the United States for horses taken from him by the military forces of the United States and converted to their own use during the war of the rebellion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman. I wrote the report and I will be pleased to answer any questions he may ask.

Mr. MACON. My inquiry is this: I notice all the claims with which I have anything to do connected with property taken by federal soldiers during the civil war have been forced to go on what is known as the "omnibus" war-claims bill. This seems to have been a loss of horses which occurred during the civil war. Now, I would like for the gentleman to tell me the difference or distinction between this class of losses and the class that we put on the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. The complaint that the gentleman makes is, I think, well founded. I might say, to the gentleman's satisfaction, that I have met with that same fate. This House has passed bills for the payment of claims, some of them similar to this claim. Those claims have in a number of instances gone to the Senate, and I know that I have industriously tried in another place to get action on another matter similar to the case the gentleman mentions, but have been unsuccessful. I know, furthermore, that bills similar to this have gone into another bill sometimes called the "omnibus" bill, and they have not passed, as the gentleman says; and I am hoping, I might say reverently, Mr. Speaker, on account of the multitude of letters which I get complaining of nonaction elsewhere on meritorious claims-I am not only hoping but I am praying for the passage of an omnibus bill at some early day. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the gentleman can lodge a just complaint against nonaction on another claim, I submit to his candor, his judgment, and to his sense of equity and fairness, is no reason why this claim should be defeated. [Applause.] Mr. MACON. One question just there. Does the gentleman not think that the passage of individual bills of this character will hinder the progress of the omnibus claims bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not, frankly I say to the gentleman-in my opinion, in no way. And I will say further this is not in any omnibus bill, so far as I know. I am as greatly interested in the passage of the omnibus bill as the gentleman is and my people are, and I hope that it will be passed, but whether it passes or not, we certainly ought to pass this meritorious measure.

Mr. MACON. My policy is to treat all alike, and of course I will not object if it does not prejudice the omnibus bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. And a manifestly just and correct policy. Mr. MACON. Then I withdraw the objection.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to ask a question. I want to ask if this bill has the unanimous approval of the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. It has the unanimous report from the committee, and it is for the purchase money of two good Kentucky horses at $125 each, and their pedigrees were worth that much.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a very good illustration of the necessity at times of giving careful consideration to a proposition. I did not object to the consideration of the bill. It only provides for the payment of $250 to a man for two horses taken in the war of the rebellion. But it is put upon the ground that the man could not be accused of disloyalty because he was weak-minded. The man probably was weak-minded. Then the committee produced two affidavits, one of the man, that his horses were worth $250, and one of his committee, who had charge of him for fifty years because the man was weak-minded, that the horses were only worth $200. And yet the committee, finding that the man could not be accused of disloyalty because he was an idiot, accept the judgment of the idiot as against the judgment of his committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, Mr. Speaker, the last statement of the gentleman made us all laugh. It was in pleasantry, and the gentleman sometimes indulges in pleasantry to the delight of the House, and sometimes in a whole lot of good, solid, serious argu-I want to say to the gentleman that he will not find any such statement as that which he has made as being the conclusion of the committee that reported this bill. One of the affidavits in the case made that statement, but the War Claims Committee nowhere said that. Hence I challenge the statement of the gentleman that the committee had reached any such conclusion in the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it may be true, although it is not disclosed in the report, that the distinguished committee themselves were acquainted with the value of these horses taken more than forty years ago. It may be true that they were on the ground, but they do not disclose it in the report. The report shows that there are two affidavits as to the value of these horses, one made by the beneficiary of the bill, who is admitted to be a weak-minded person, and the other made by his committee, having charge of him. Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. W

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee perhaps went upon the idea that even a weak-minded man ought to know that two Kentucky horses were worth $250. [Laughter.]
Mr. CLAYTON. And the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

MANN] ought to know that.

Mr. MANN. It so happens that both the gentlemen are Kentuckians-the feeble-minded man and his committee. The feebleminded man says that the horses were reasonably of the market value of $125 each. Then the man in charge of the feebleminded man, after giving the reason that the man could not be disloyal because he was weak-minded, says that the horses were each of the reasonable market value of $100. Now, Mr.

Speaker, if it were putting the judgment of a Kentuckian against the judgment of a man outside of Kentucky on the value of the horses, I should accept the judgment of the Kentuckian; but both of these gentlemen are Kentuckians. Both are well acquainted with the value of horses, and the committee assumes that a weak-minded Kentuckian knows more about the value of herses than a man of brains in Kentucky.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make one remark. would be perfectly proper, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] saw fit so to do, for him to offer an amendment to reduce this amount to $200. But he has not offered any such amendment, so that the House is confronted with this proposition: Shall you pay an admittedly just and proper claim? That the claim is just and proper and ought to be paid the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] himself does not deny.

Mr. MANN. Of course I did not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. As I understand, the gentleman finds no fault-

Mr. MANN. I have had $50 worth of fun out of it myself.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I have had $50 worth of satisfaction in having the gentleman from that great timbered section of our country, namely, Chicago, as our friend from California said yesterday-I have had a whole lot of satisfaction in knowing that he knows absolutely nothing of the value of Kentucky horses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HARPERS FERRY SCHOOL DISTRICT, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the objection I made to the second bill on the calendar, and ask unanimous consent that we may return to the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to return to the second bill on the calendar, and desires to withdraw his objection to the consideration of the The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8959) for the relief of the board of education of the Harpers Ferry school district of Jefferson County, W. Va.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the board of education of the Harpers Ferry school district, the sum of $3,500, or so much thereof as may be found due and unpaid the said board of education for school buildings used and material taken therefrom by the United States Army during the war of 1861 to 1865 for its use and benefit.

Also the following committee amendment:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out "$3,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,121.72."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to offer the same observation that I did a moment ago about this bill. This seems to be a war-claim bill, and for a schoolhouse that was used by the federal forces in the State of West Virginia.

We have churches in our State that were used by the Union forces during the war, and we have been trying very hard for a good many years to secure proper pay therefor, and we are compelled to put all those claims upon the omnibus war-claims bill. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, why there is this difference in the action taken concerning school property and church property?

Mr. MILLER. I will state to the gentleman that this is not a bill coming from the Committee on Claims, but from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on War Claims why this difference is made between these two kinds of property?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Vermont give attention to the gentleman from Arkansas, who desires to ask him

Mr. MACON. I notice that this bill provides for the payment for the use and occupation of school property in the State of West Virginia by the Union Army during the war. Now, I want to know why that was done, and why the committee will not allow claims for the use of church property to be paid without their being required to go on the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. HASKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa. Mr. HAUGEN. Every claim has to stand on its own merits. These schools were seized and used and occupied for the use of the army. The material of the school buildings was used afterwards in building roads, and therefore the bill very properly comes before this committee. It has received most careful consideration, and the committee unanimously reports the bill.

Mr. MACON. But the gentleman does not seem to understand the inquiry I am making. I want to know why it is that a bill of this kind, proper enough in itself, perhaps, should be considered in this way, while all bills for payment for use and occupation of churches have to go on the omnibus bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. The claims that are carried in the omnibus bill are claims which have gone to the Court of Claims for findings.

Mr. MACON. Was this bill referred to the Court of Claims? Mr. HAUGEN. It has been before the Court of Claims.

Mr. MACON. What I want to find out is why this claim is not on the omnibus war claims bill, as the other war claims are. Mr. STURGISS. Will the gentleman permit me? I am familiar with the case.

Mr. MACON. Information is what I want to get.

Mr. STURGISS. This is a peculiar case. This is a bill for the reimbursement of the board of education of Harpers Ferry district, in West Virginia, for schoolhouses, three in number, that were taken possession of, used, and occupied by the federal troops for two years. The buildings, having been so used, were taken down and part of them used in putting up bake ovens and winter quarters for the troops. Then the brick remaining were sold and the money turned into the Federal Treasury. The Government of the United States got the benefit of it in every way, shape, and form. Harpers Ferry was overrun with troops on one or the other side for three or four years.

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman will permit me, what I am endeavoring to find out is why there is a distinction made in the treatment of these bills. Now, in the city that I happen to live in, Helena, Ark., we have two churches that were used and partially destroyed during the war by federal soldiers. We have been trying to get an appropriation for the use, occupation, and destruction of this church property for many years, and although these claims are now upon the omnibus war claims bill, it has not been passed, and possibly never will be. Now, why is this difference made as to these cases?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This was passed by the committee after the other bill had gone to the Senate.

Mr. MACON. After the explanation given by the gentleman from Vermont, which is just the information that I have been seeking, I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LAPENE & FERRE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2886) for the relief of the legal representatives of the late firm of Lapene & Ferre.

Mr. MACON. Reserving the right to object—
Mr. MANN. I object. I do not think we ought by unanimous consent to overrule the Supreme Court of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

STEWART & CO. AND A. P. H. STEWART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3843) for the relief of the legal representatives of Stewart & Co. and A. P. H. Stewart.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and adjust the claims of Stewart & Co. and A. P. H. Stewart, agent, for internal-revenue taxes collected on government cotton between January 1, 1865, and January 1, 1866, and which have not been heretofore refunded, and for this purpose, any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding, sections 989, 3226, 3227, and 3228 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby made applicable and available with the same force and effect as if protest and demand for payment had been made within the time prescribed by said sections, and the amount not exceeding $11,208.04, when ascertained as aforesaid, and not heretofore refunded, shall be paid to legal representatives of A. P. H. Stewart and Charles A. Weed, out of the permanent annual appropriation provided for similar claims allowed within the present fiscal year.

Mr. Mann. Mr. Speaker. I reserve the right to chiect if I

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, if I may, for the purpose of asking a question. There was at one time a bill like this providing for the adjustment of claims of Stewart & Co., of Weed, Witters & Co., and A. P. H. Stewart. The department reported against the Weed claim, and that went out of the bill in the Senate. It is stated in this report that this is a copy of that bill as reported. Now, we have got to-day in that the claim of Stewart, striking out the claim of Weed & Co.; but you provide that the money shall be paid to the legal representatives of Stewart and Charles A. Weed. There can not be the same legal representatives of Stewart and Weed, and if the gentleman is informed all right, I will be glad to hear it. I do not object to one claimant if it was proper to pay one-half of it to that company.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill. course our committee did not know, and had no means of knowing, the motives that influenced the Senators in striking out Weed, Witters & Co., but we assume that was done because they were not proper parties. This bill has been recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon in reference to This bill has never been before the department.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. This claim has been recommended.

Mr. MANN. This claim, with a number of others, went before the department, and was reported upon in 1896. The department reported in favor of the claim of Stewart and against the claim of Weed, and undoubtedly the Senate endeavored to correct the bill by striking out the claim of Weed, but did not change it in the appropriating part of the bill, because it provides that when ascertained the money shall be paid—the gentleman will find it on line 9, page 2—to the legal representatives of Stewart and Charles A. Weed. I suggest to the gentleman that instead of taking the chance of enacting into law a provision paying a claim to another man's representatives, we strike out the words "and Charles A. Weed," so that the gentleman will have an opportunity to ascertain.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I have not examined into the reasons for making the change in the Senate bill, but the report to the Senate shows that this amount of money was actually overpaid; that the Government had no right to collect it, and the Senate report, which was adopted by the House committee, says:

Had these claims been presented prior to June 7, 1873, they could have been considered in this office without further legislation. It is understood that this delay in presenting the claims was due to the fact that the claimant supposed that a letter written by his attorney to this office in July, 1871, was sufficient to save the bar, and to the further fact that he relied for evidence in support of the fifstnamed claim on the case of The United States v. Harrison Johnson, decided by the United States Supreme Court at its October term, 1887.

Mr. HASKINS. The act of Congress of 1864 provided that all cotton sold by or on account of the Government of the United States shall be free and exempt from duty at the time of the sale thereof.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Vermont did not get my point. I was not discussing the merits of the bill. In my judgment, the bill is meritorious. The original bill in the last Congress provided for the payment of certain claims to Stewart, and also to Weed & Co. The department reported against the payment of the claim to Weed & Co. Thereupon the Senate apparently attempted to amend the bill, and the present bill only authorizes the adjustment of the claims of Stewart; but when those claims are adjusted it provides that they shall be paid, one-half of them to the representatives of Weed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be passed without prejudice, so that the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] may be answered, and we may return to it. Will the gentleman have any objection to that?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BUTLER. In order that the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] may be answered later, I will ask that this bill be passed without prejudice, and that we may return to it later.

Mr. MACON. Before that request is granted I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY], who seems to be in charge of the bill, a question. I could not hear the bill distinctly when it was read, there was so much conversation going on, so many gentlemen who did not seem to want to hear it. I want to know if this does not provide for the removal of the bar of the statute of limitations as against this particular measure?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I think that is about what it amounts to. Mr. MACON. Then I shall have to object, unless there is a general bill that removes the bar of the statute of limitations against other claims that I have in mind.

Mr. MANN. All the war-claim bills remove the bar of the statute of limitations.

Mr. MACON. On the contrary, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we have some war claims that are barred, that will not even be given consideration, because they are barred by the statute.

Mr. MANN. They are all barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. MACON. Unless a similar rule can be adopted as to all of them, I shall object to the removal of the bar in this case.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. This is not an ordinary war claim. Here was money paid into the Treasury, which the Treasurer says he had no right to collect, which was collected inadvertently and by mistake. If the claimant had applied in the proper way for it before the statute ran, he could have collected it from the department, but he undertook to get it by a letter and did not follow the proper method.

Mr. MACON. That was his fault.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. It was his misfortune.

Mr. MACON. The unfortunates in the South who lost their cotton and other property during the war did the very same thing. They allowed the statute to bar them before they pro-

Mr. HOLLIDAY. There is no question on earth that the Government owes them this money.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. There are on the calendar a number of resolutions referring bills containing war claims to the Court of Claims. Does the gentleman understand that the passage of these resolutions waives, in effect, the bar of the statute of limitations?

Mr. MACON. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that we have had that resolution on the calendar for twelve months, and we have not been able to pass it and have the claims in it referred to the Court of Claims, and there seems to be no prospect of having it referred during this session, and I object.

Mr. MANN. There are a large number of these resolutions on the calendar, and I wished to ascertain, if I could, whether the gentleman understood that this resolution, in effect, practically waives the statute bar of limitations?

Mr. MACON. We can not get congressional action on them. Mr. MANN. If the gentleman himself did not take that attitude, they would be passed. If the gentleman takes the attitude that no bill shall be passed waiving the statute of limitations, to be consistent-and he is not only able but consistenthe would have to object to the consideration of these resolutions, because they, in effect, waive the bar of the statute of limitations

Mr. MACON. I will object to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania until I see whether or not we do pass any war claims where the statute of limitations is not waived.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the bill be passed without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. That request is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. I object.

NAPOLEON B. GIDDINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4690) for the relief of the legal representatives of Napoleon B. Giddings.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PHOEBE CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11632) for the relief of Phoebe Clark.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Phoebe Clark, of Helena, Lewis and Clark County, in the State of Montana, the sum of $116, for a type-writer and necessary repairs thereon, which said typewriter was furnished and used by her as transcribing clerk in the office of the United States surveyor-general of the State of Montana, exclusively for government work and which said typewriter, and the repairs thereon, were necessary for a proper performance of her duty as such transcribing clark.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MITCHELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1536) authorizing the Secretary of War to recognize William Mitchell, deceased, as having been a member of Company C. First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, civil

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to recognize William Mitchell, deceased, as having been a member of Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, civil war, from the 25th day of August, 1863, up to his death, which occurred the 18th day of September, 1863.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

O. MAURY & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2969) for the relief of O. Maury & Co., of Bordeaux, France. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to L. Renard, agent of O. Maury & Co., of Bordeaux, France, in full reimbursement of losses sustained by them by reason of the erroneous detention and subsequent destruction by the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture of three casks of wine imported into the United States by said firm, which payment is recommended by said department, the sum of $238.15, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JEROME E. MORSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4151) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Jerome E. Morse, U. S. Navy, retired.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below

S. 9006. An act to amend an act authorizing the Washington, Spa Springs and Gretta Railroad Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved February 18, 1907—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 8588. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Dewitt Eastman," approved January 8, 1909—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 7374. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Astoria, in the State of Oregon-to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 8555. An act to relinquish the interest of the United States in and to certain land in Dade County, Fla., to John M. Bryan, jr.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4535. An act to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States.

JOHN M. HILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18600) for the relief of John M. Hill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John M. Hill, late register of the United States land office at Walla Walla, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $750, the amount paid by him out of his own funds for clerk hire during his term of office as such register prior to the appointment of a clerk in said office from an eligible list furnished by the Civil Service Commission of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ELLIS W. JOY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14290) for the relief of Ellis W. Joy. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Ellis W. Joy, of Andrew County, Mo., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, being the sum unlawfully collected from him by the board of enrollment in the State of Ohio, namely, $300, to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the army, he not being a citizen of Ohio at the time and serving as a soldier with the Missouri trees. troops.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MILLE LAC BAND, CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The next business was the bill (S. 5330) for the relief of the Mille Lac band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have somebody explain the bill, and I ask that it may be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZING CREDIT IN ACCOUNTS OF UNITED STATES TREASURER.

The next business was the bill (S. 4049) authorizing a credit in certain accounts of the Treasurer of the United States. The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how this shortage occurred, what the shortage is, and when it occurred.

Mr. MILLER, Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman by calling his attention to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. He said:

The relief sought in this case is authority to remove from the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States an item carried therein as "unavailable funds, office assistant treasurer of the United States, Boston," a shortage of $3,000 in the amount of money belonging to the United States while in the custody of assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass., who is responsible for the safe-keeping thereof under his official bond.

The man who stole the money was arrested and tried twice.

Mr. MACON. Was he acquitted or convicted?
Mr. MANN. He was acquitted.
Mr. MILLER. The assistant treasurer was in no way to blame, and we thought it would be a very great hardship to hold him responsible for a loss with which he had nothing to do, and for which he ought not to be held responsible,

Mr. MACON. The department holds the man responsible that the jury said was not responsible by its verdict of not guilty?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think that the department is in any better position to say whether the man that was acquitted was guilty than the jury had to say that he was innocent'

Mr. MILLER. There was no question about the guilt of the man.

Mr. MACON. Just one of those cases where the jury turned a guilty man loose?

Mr. MILLER. That is it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is this claim about?

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRBELL], who is the author of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Three thousand dollars was stolen from the subtreasury at Boston.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; and the man who stole the money was arrested and tried. The treasurer is asking for relief on the ground that he was in no way to blame for the loss, and the Secretary of the Treasury says that he ought to be given relief.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like very much to ask what these people give bonds for if they are not to be held to account for the money lost?

Mr. MILLER. They give bonds for the safe-keeping of the money. That is what they give the bonds for, and if there is any negligence whatever on the part of the assistant treasurer or anyone bonded to the Government, I think he ought to be held strictly to his bond, but where there is no fault or negligence on the part of the office and he could not help the loss, I do not think he ought to bear the loss, but the Government of the United States ought to bear the loss.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did they ever find the man who stole the money?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; they found him and tried him. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What did they do with him?

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will permit—
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Wait a minute. What became of the man that they arrested?
Mr. MILLER. He was arrested and tried and found not

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I object.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman not reserve his objection for a moment? This is my bill and I would like to explain the facts to the gentleman from Missouri

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well. The gentleman will have a tough time explaining why he ought to have that money.

Mr. TIRRELL. There were two persons only who could have been guilty of any theft from the United States in connection with this matter. One was a Mr. Vasser and the other was a This embezzlement was discovered in a package Mr. Hastings. of money which was forwarded from the subtreasury in Boston The package should have contained $105,000. Upon counting it it was found to contain $102,000, a shortage of Thereupon the subtreasurer in Boston immediately went to work and by every possible means available ascer-tained all the facts connected with the same. Suspicion pointed entirely to a clerk named Hastings, and he was indicted in the United States court. He was tried, and the trial lasted some three weeks, as I remember. Every scintilla of evidence that could be produced was submitted to the jury, and the jury disagreed. Thereupon in the course of less than a year he was tried again, and thoroughly tried, and the subtreasurer did everything in his power to submit all the facts in the case in these trials to the jury, and the jury on the second trial acquitted Hastings. There was no other party in any way implicated or upon whom any suspicion could possibly rest in regard to this matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You said a while ago there were What became of the other man? two men.

Mr. TIRRELL. The other man who was supposed to be implicated at the time was exonerated by all concerned from any possibility or suspicion of being connected with the matter. There were two at first, and there were only two upon whom there could possibly be any implication.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why did not they arrest both?

Mr. TIRRELL. Because they arrested the man against whom the evidence pointed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They arrested the wrong man.

Mr. TIRRELL. No; there was but one man; there was nothing against the other man. Now, the subtreasurer went beyond what he was required to do and took a bond to protect him against this loss, and the gentleman from Missouri will well understand that they must show, in order to hold the surety company, as will appear by the report, wherein they set forth the bond—that there shall be proved that the loss arose from a fraudulent or dishonest act in order that the subtreasurer, Mr. Curtis, could recover under that bond, and this bond was in the usual form.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TIRRELL.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There was a bond insuring the subtreasurer against loss by the misconduct of these men.

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes; let me read the bond to the gentle-

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Was any suit brought?
Mr. TIRRELL. Under the bond a suit would be useless.

The conditions of the bond given were as follows:

"Now, therefore, if the said principal shall for the term beginning the — day of — and ending on the — day of — truly, faithfully, and accurately execute and discharge all of the acts and duties now or hereafter required of him by said assistant treasurer in said employment or by any and all laws and regulations concerning the business of said subtreasury, and shall further indemnify and hold harmless said Edwin U. Curtis and said United States of America from and against any and all loss which may arise from the fraudulent or dishonest acts of the said principal, then this obligation shall be void and of no effect; otherwise it shall be and remain in full force, virtue, and effect."

Now, they could not prove a fraudulent or dishonest act on the part of this man, and therefore Mr. Curtis could not recover on the bond.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Let me suggest to the gentleman that in criminal cases the law requires that you must prove the fact beyond every reasonable doubt, whereas in a civil case it would only be necessary to prove that there is a preponderance of evidence and, as the courts have held in a great many instances, that an acquittal in a criminal case is no bar to a civil action.

Mr. TIRRELL. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that this question was submitted to the United States district attorney, and he rendered a written opinion upon that matter, in which he said:

In my judgment, and undoubtedly in the judgment of the district attorney's office, there has not been such a breach of the condition of the bond that a claim against the surety company could be maintained.

In other words, where can you find any neglect on the part of the subtreasurer at Boston? In endeavoring to find out the criminal who committed this offense and embezzled this money, he at once put his agents at work and gathered up all the possible evidence that could be gathered in connection with this There was only one man against whom there was any suspicion or any evidence whatever could be gathered anywhere, and he was indicted in the United States court. He was tried and acquitted, and he was then tried again. What more, I submit to the gentleman from Missouri, could the subtreasurer at Boston have done to protect the United States Government?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I cited the gentleman to the fact that suit could have been brought upon the bond for this shortage, and I think it could have been recovered; and, as I suggested a while ago, the courts have passed upon the fact that an acquittal in a criminal case is not a bar to a civil action, and,

Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object. The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

HASTINGS STEAMBOAT COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4427) for the relief of the Hastings Steamboat Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Hastings Steamboat Company, or its legal representatives, the sum of $256.35, as full compensation to said steamboat company for loss and damages sustained by it on account of the steamer Dauntless having her stem struck and split by the U. S. S. Cartwright in the waters of Puget Sound on October 12, 1904, while said Cartwright was being operated under the direction and control of the United States Government and said Dauntless was lying motionless at the dock.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] whether it is the policy of his committee, where an injury oc curs by collision at sea or on the water, to allow for loss of time to the injured boat?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, to be frank with the gentleman from Illinois, it has not been the practice of the committee, and we have never done anything of the kind heretofore. I am inclined to think, from looking over the report in this case, that we have allowed a small amount for the loss of time.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I care nothing about the amount in this case. It is but little. There is another case here on the calendar with a still smaller total amount also. But it makes quite a precedent.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. And if it is not to be considered as a precedent, it will be quoted anyhow if the bill passes.

Mr. MILLER. There is no doubt about the meritorious character of the claim.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt that the man whose boat was damaged should be paid the amount of damage to the boat. The question is whether he should charge twenty or thirty dollars for loss of time. In this particular case there is some doubt about the merits. The inspector who examined this said the injury to the boat was a fake.

Mr. MILLER. The Quartermaster-General says the claim is all right.

Mr. MANN. The Quartermaster-General says that two men examined the boat. One of them took the word of the owner of the boat without going any further, and he reported that the claim was all right. The other examined the injury, and he says that it bore absolute evidence that the boat was as old as

Mr. MILLER. We are not discussing the merits of the claim now. I am not in favor of allowing claims of that character, I will say frankly to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DAVID W. STOCKSTILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8982) for the relief of David W. Stockstill.

The bill was read in full.

Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object-Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object,

I would like some explanation of the bill.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if this bill was ever referred to the War Department or to the Auditor for the War Department?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I can not answer that question. There is nothing in the report to show that. It is the rule of the committee to send all bills to the proper department, and this ought to have gone there.

Mr. MANN. I object.

HENRY A. TOLBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7048) for the relief of Henry A. Tolbert.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentieman to explain this bill.

Mr. MILLER. What does the gentleman want to know?

What the claim is for; where the default was Mr. SABATH.

in the contract?

Mr. MILLER. In answer to the gentleman, I desire to say that this is a claim where a young man, for the first time in his life, thought he could make money out of taking a contract to erect some buildings for the Government of the United States. He bid on a certain contract. He had to enter into a bond of obligation to pay in case he failed to enter into a contract after the bid was accepted by the Government. After the bid was accepted by the Government, he went to look over the field and inquire what amount it would cost to do the work. He found that if he entered into the contract he would lose very largely on it. His father and a friend of his were on the bond, and demand was made upon them for the payment of it, because he failed to enter into the contract after he learned for the first time that he could not carry it out. The result was that his father had to pay the bond, some $3,000. The Government of the United States says that the amount which he bid upon the work was very much less than the work could be done for.

The contract was let to the next highest bidder, and he did the work. The difference between the two amounts was about $3,000, and that was the amount his father had to pay on his bond. Now, it is the accumulation of a lifetime of a man who served his country faithfully during the dark days of the civil war, and he is asking in his old age to be reimbursed the money that he has paid out. The Government recommends favorable action upon this case.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I find that when people take government contracts and lose something, they come to the Government to be made whole, but when they take contracts from the Government and make money on them they never come and offer to give any of the money back again.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that that is true in very many cases, and the result is they have never been able to get any claim of that kind reported from the Committee on Claims. This is a case where he had not entered into a contract. He simply made a bid, and after investigation of the whole field he found his bid was much too low. He found that it would be impossible to do the work without a heavy loss, and he asked to be relieved. But the Government held him strictly to the contract, as though entered upon, and his father had to pay the bond. I say that if the man had been an experienced man, a man who had had large experience in contracts with the Government, I would not stand here for a single moment and ask that he be relieved. But he had never had any experience. This was the first bid he had ever made, and until after he had made it he did not realize what he was doing. Afterwards his father had to pay the amount of the bond. If ever there was a meritorious claim before the committee I think this is one.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Was the Government damaged in any way

Mr. MILLER. No. The Government itself says, through its officers, it was not damaged, and that the amount of the bid of the next bidder was a reasonable amount for the work done. I will read the language contained in the report:

It is proper to state that the amount paid for construction of the buildings to the next lowest bilder is deemed reasonable, and it is quite certain that the amount submitted in the proposal of Harry W. Tolbert for their construction was less than the work could have been performed in accordance with the plans and specifications therefor. It is therefore the opinion of this office that there is a certain equity in the matter in favor of the claimant which may warrant Congress in a favorable consideration of the claim, and the approval of the accompanying bill when corrected as to the year "1902" instead of "1892" as written therein.

I want to call attention again to the statement made by the father:

The Government has not been to a loss of this amount as the list of bids shows that the price paid by the department was not excessive and, with the exception of my son's, the bids were not far apart. My son is a poor working mechanic, without means, and I could not in justice allow my fellow-bondsman to lose anything, therefore the whole loss, if any, falls on me, and I am not able to stand a loss of this amount. It is the saving of a lifetime and was laid up for use in old age. If I have caused the Government any loss I am willing to pay. I am a veteran of the civil war and I think I am entitled to be dealt with leniently in this matter. this matter.

And the chairman of the committee and every member of the committee feel the same way about it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be in the way of just claim-

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit— Mr. SIMS. I would like to permit.

Mr. MANN. Only to give my impression.
Mr. SIMS. I would like to have it.
Mr. MANN. This young fellow was as fresh as fresh could be, and as green as grass. He had a notion that he was a contractor, or would make a contractor out of himself. The Government advertised for bids. Without knowing anything of the subject, he undertook to make a bid, and put in a bid for apparently much less than the work could be done for. he stopped; the bond, however, had gone in with his bid. When he found out something about the real thing, after making a foolish bid, he found that he could not do the work for it.

Mr. SIMS. Did not his father know before he signed that bid that he was undertaking a matter for which he might be

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly his father knew that. His father, like many fathers, had an exaggerated notion of the qualities of his son.

Do you not think it would be a good idea for him Mr. SIMS. to pay something for the good opinion?

Mr. MANN. He ought to pay something for that opinion; although I may say to the gentleman that those of us who have large families, if we should be required to pay that much in every case, it would be exceedingly expensive. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. That father pays for his good opinion of his son,
If we are going to say to every young man, "Bid on government contracts when you please, make your bonds, and the House will release you if it is found that it is not profit-

Mr. MANN. I will say I think there is no danger of that. The gentleman knows that I am not very much in favor of paying claims of this sort, and know nothing about this claim except what I find in the record.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was there any loss in dollars to the Government?

Mr. MILLER. This other party performed the work, and there was no more loss than if the other bid had never been

Mr. SIMS. Is this the unanimous report from your commit-

Mr. MILLER.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman from Illinois stated that there was no actual loss in dollars and cents to the Government. Now, that, I take, is a fact.

Mr. MILLER. The first bid was for $9,000, as I remember, and the second bid was for $12,000. When the first bid failed, of course they let the work to the second bidder for $3,000 more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the work was done? Mr. MILLER. And the work was done, and the Government says that the work was done for a reasonable amount.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then the only outlay the Government was put to was for readvertising?

Mr. MILLER. They were not even put to that expense.

They simply let the contract to the next lowest bidder.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. In the hearings it did not develop that there was any collusion between the lowest bidder and the next lowest bidder, did it? Mr. MILLER. None whatever. It was shown absolutely that there was no collusion. If there had been any, the committee would not have reported the claim.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, when I first came here I served two years on the Committee on Claims, and did a great deal of hard work on it, and I always fought this kind of bills on principle. I am against this one. It is just exactly like the star-route bidding used to be. You could bid on as many of them as you wanted to, and you took what were good and threw the rest back on the Government. That got to be such a nuisance that at last they made a regulation in the department or Congress passed a law that when a man bid on a mail route he must give bond that he would take it if it was knocked off to him, and the principle is right. Suppose a man goes to work and bids on a contract, on the expectation and belief, after investigation, that the steel in a building will cost $100,000, and he gets the contract. If conditions were as he supposed, he could come out even and make something on it; but something happens in the steel trade, so that the price of the steel in the building goes up to $110,000, and he loses $7,000. Then he comes into Congress and wants the Government to recoup him for the loss. The principle is bad, and I object to it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2901) authorizing the Omaha tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the substitute.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, are bills from the Indian Committee in order to-day?

The SPEAKER. Anything on the Private Calendar is in order to-day, if it is reached.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Omaha tribe of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said Omaha tribe from the United States under the treaty between the United States and the said Omaha tribe of Indians, ratified and affirmed March 16, 1854, or any other treatles or laws, or for the misappropriation of any funds of said Omaha tribe for purposes not for its material beneft, or for failure of the United States to pay said Omaha tribe any money due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal or equitable claims, if any, of said Omaha tribe against the United States, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counter-claim which the United States may have against said Omaha tribe of Indians, and to enter judgment thereon. The Court of Claims shall advance said cause upon the docket. If any question is submitted to said court it shall settle the rights, both legal and equitable, of both the Omaha tribe of Indians and the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof in said cause shall be deemed a final settlement of all claims of said Omaha Indians against the United States. Such action in the Court of Claims shall be presented by a single petition, subject, however, to amendment, to be filed within one year after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the Omaha tribe of Indians party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the Omaha tribe of Indians bases its claim for recovery; and the said petition may be verified by any attorney at law employed under existing law by the said Omaha Indians to prosecute their claims under this act, upon information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements or verifications shall be necessary. And the said Omaha tribe of Indians, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may, by contract in writing, employ an attorney or attorneys at law to bring and prosecute such suit, such contract to provide that the fees of such attorneys shall be fixed and determined by said court at such sum only as said court shall find the services of said attorney or attorneys rendered in bringing and prosecuting said suit shall be reasonably worth. Official letters, papers, reports, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence if competent under the rules of said Court of Claims: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree such reasonable fees as the court shall find shall be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the Omaha tribe of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said Omaha tribe of Indians: Provided further, That the Otoe and Missouri Indians, of Oklahoma, are hereby authorized to intervene in the said action and set up and have determined any right or interest they or either of them may have or claim to have in said claim; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said Court of Claims to hear and determined all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said otoe and Missouri Indians, of whatsoever nature, which either or both of said tribes of Indians may have or claim to have against the United States, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for the de

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask some member of the committee to make a statement about

Mr. HACKNEY. I shall be glad to answer an inquiry.

Mr. MANN. What was the object in striking out the Senate bill and inserting the amendment, which seems to be much more lenient toward the payment of attorneys' fees?

Mr. HACKNEY. The gentleman is very much mistaken in that respect. The purpose in striking out the language of the Senate bill was to perfect the bill. We amended it in so many respects, particularly in regard to allowing any equitable or legal set-off and not recognizing any particular contract with attorneys. That was one of the reasons why we amended the Senate bill. We did not want to tie the Indians to any particular contract in employing any particular attorney. There seems to be some question about what attorney shall represent them, and we had a good deal of trouble about that.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that the Senate bill employed any particular attorneys.

Mr. HACKNEY. It referred to a certain contract made at a certain time, many years ago, and I am not sure whether it had met the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, but we conformed to the suggestion of the department as to the attorney feature.

Mr. MANN. Of course I know the Committee on Indian Affairs do not desire to report any bill that is in the interest of attorneys, but it looks to me very much as though this was. I think it is a matter that ought to be considered more fully than it can be here to-day.

Mr. HACKNEY. That feature was fully considered by the committee, and we leave it to the court to fix the pay of these attorneys, who bring suit only at such sum as they earn, and not require the Indians to pay a given per cent that might be very unreasonable.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We intended that the Court of Claims should pass upon the attorney fees.

Mr. MANN. I would much rather trust the department to fix the attorney fees than to trust the Court of Claims, where the attorneys present their bill and get other attorneys to testify as to the value of their services. It is a mighty easy thing to get other attorneys to fix a high valuation upon another attorney's fees.

Mr. HACKNEY. The gentleman will see that we provide that it shall be paid only after the attorney has submitted his contract of employment to the Secretary. In order to get a standing in court he must submit his contract to the Secretary and get his approval. The bill was amended in that particular.

Mr. CARTER. Let me ask the gentleman, does not the amended bill provide that those Indians who reside at Oklahoma belonging to this tribe may intervene in this suit, and that the original bill did not make such a provision?

Mr. HACKNEY. Yes; the Otoes and Missouris in Oklahoma claim to have some share in this claim, and we want to have the whole matter settled, as recommended by the department. I think the bill is in exceptionally good form.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Is it a unanimous report of the

Mr. HACKNEY. Yes. Mr. MANN. I think the bill should be considered where there is an opportunity to debate it. It provides for all legal and equitable claims to be submitted. It says "and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims to determine all legal and equitable claims of said Omaha tribe against the United States.

Mr. HACKNEY. And also all claims of the Government against the Indians.

Mr. MANN. That follows, of course.

Mr. HACKNEY. I think the language is such as to give the court full jurisdiction both of legal claims and equitable claims and legal and equitable set-offs and counterclaims.'

Mr. MANN. The language of the bill gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction of any fanciful claim or otherwise that the tribe chooses to make for any purpose, and then if any money is obtained the bigger end will go to the attorneys. While I am an attorney and believe in taking care of the profession, I do not like to take the whole of it.

Mr. HACKNEY. The committee has considered the attorneyship matter and disregarded the previous employment and left the matter so that they could employ any attorney they pleased. I challenge the gentleman from Illinois to draw a bill that will protect the Indians better than this does. That is one thing the committee undertook to do to provide measures so that they would not be held up for exhorbitant fees.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether it is too late to make a point of order that this bill is not on the proper calendar?

Mr. MANN. I was about to say that the bill did not belong on the Private Calendar anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not under consideration. What is the gentleman's point of order?

The point of order is that it is a public Mr. HOLLIDAY.

and not a private bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, to save time so that it may be possible to get through the calendar to-day, I will object for the

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the bill and direct the transfer to the Union Calendar if, under the rule and practice, it ought to go there.

SAMUEL GARLAND.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2245) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation, of Samuel Garland, deceased.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that the report was made some time in April, and on May 29, 1908, the Indian omnibus bill was passed, and this matter was incorporated in that bill. So it is already passed and is now law, and I ask unanimous consent that it be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will lie on the

There was no objection.

DAVID ROBERTSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5808) placing David Robertson on the retired list of the United States Army. The bill was read.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I object.

CHARLES ENGSTROM AND C. PETERSEN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 19757) for the relief of Charles Engstrom and C. Petersen.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. Mr. CALE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve my objection.

Mr. CALE. Mr. Speaker, this is a claim by Engstrom and Petersen for money, $200, that was collected by the United States Government without any authority whatever. and the only manner in which these two young men can get the money back is by an act of Congress. It seems that in 1899 these two hard-working and industrious young men in Alaska thought they could make a little money by going into the fur business and raising foxes on a barren island known as "Dry Island," in Alaska, an island entirely worthless and useless up to the present time. The United States Government discovered that they were squatted on that island and had gone into this business, so the revenue cutter was directed to go there and to collect $100 a year license. Prior to this time, and prior to the passage of the act of March 14, 1898, the Government had leased islands, but after the passage of this act it was discovered that it had no right whatever to lease those islands, and after the passage of that act these $200 were collected from these two young men. The department and the legal adviser of the Treasury Department discovered that the Government had no authority for collecting this money, and these men have been out of their money for the last eight or nine years. The department has recommended that this money be returned to them. It is simply money that is taken from these two young men, cash, and the Government has given them nothing whatever in return for it. They have been out of the use of the money eight or nine years. They paid the money at the solicitation of the Government, supposing, of course, that the Government had the right to collect the money. They went to a great deal of trouble and expense under the misinformation they had received from the department itself.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CALE. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that it was the policy of the Government up there to lease these islands for the raising of foxes, and that a number of leases were executed to different people, which they were glad to make, and for which they were glad to pay the rental?

Mr. CALE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Thereupon these two gentlemen executed a lease. Mr. CALE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Let me correct the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Well, they did have a lease and they were glad to pay the rent.

Mr. CALE. Yes. Mr. MANN. The Thereupon it was held by the government officers, purely as a technical matter, that there was no authority on the part of the Government to execute this lease, and these people, having made the lease, remained in possession and are yet in possession of this island, raising foxes upon it for profit, perfectly willing in the first place to have paid the rental demanded by the Government, but when it was ascertained that the Government had no technical authority to execute the lease, they still remained on the island. Now, what justice is there in their claim?

Mr. CALE. I want to correct the gentleman. He is entirely mistaken, or else I am. Prior to the passage of the law of March 14, 1898, the Government had a right to lease these islands, and did lease them; but after the passage of this act the Government did not have the right to lease the islands. islands that were leased prior to the passage of this act are still being leased from year to year and a revenue collected, but after the passage of this act, which was the time these young men went on to the island, the Government collected the money, and the Government had no right to lease the islands and the Government does not in any way protect them. The gentleman or myself or anybody else can go right on to the island and go into the same business and interfere with them, for they are without protection.

On the other islands where leases are made and the Government had a legal right to lease them, the lessees are protected from all comers. These men are put off the island and they have gone out of the business and had to quit it because they had no protection.

Mr. MANN. They had the protection during the time that they were paying this money.

Mr. CALE. Exactly.
Mr. MANN. There was no decision that they should not have this protection until after the time had expired for which this money was paid. They had the protection and they had the island and they were in possession and they had everything they paid for. A technical decision was made afterwards that the Government had no right to take the money. That may be true, but they have no moral right to complain when they got what they paid for.

Mr. CALE. They did not get what they paid for, and that is what I am complaining of. They started in with the intention of going into the business, supposing the Government would protect them and that the island would be leased to them from year to year. The work they did was preliminary work, work for which they have received no compensation and no profits that would naturally flow when the business was once got under way. The Government stepped in in the meantime and dispossesses them, refuses to grant them any further license, and will not allow them on the island.

Mr. MANN. The Government did not dispossess these people.

Mr. CALE. Practically.
Mr. MANN. It did not dispossess these people. On the contrary, the Government preserved them in their rights for the period of time for which this money was paid, and at the end of that period of time, while demanding no further money, left them in possession of the island raising these foxes.

Mr. CALE. But he is in a different position from the men who leased the island prior to the passage of the act of 1898.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact of what the record shows in this report of Acting Secretary Herbert Knox Smith

After the foregoing collections had been made the Solicitor of the Treasury in an opinion dated June 28, 1900, stated that the Secretary of the Treasury had no authority to lease any islands in Alaska other than those leased and occupied prior to the act of May 14, 1898.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know what year this money was paid?

Mr. CALE. Eighteen hundred and ninety-nine.

Mr. MILLER. It is shown further back in the report, and it seems to me that if the Government of the United States collects money from anybody without any authority of law and puts it into the Treasury of the United States that there ought not be an objection to having it turned back to the people from whom it was illegally collected. There is no question but what the collection was an illegal one, and I think the gentleman from Pittsburg has

Mr. MANN. Probably has a claim on the calendar, and that will not help it any, either. Here is a man who wants something the Government has

Mr. MILLER. Which the Government collected from him without authority of law.

Mr. MANN. The man wants something which the Government has and is willing to pay a certain price for it, and he pays the price for it and gets the article, squanders it, uses it, gets the benefit from it, and all the good that the Government had the right to sell him, and then under a decision that the Government had no right to sell to him desired that the Government should pay back the money, although he had the full benefit for which he paid.

Mr. MILLER. At the time he was in possession of the land there was no authority of the Government of the United States to lease this land; none whatever. But the agents-

Mr. MANN. But they did lease it-

Mr. MILLER. But the agents of the Government went there, without authority of law, and said to these people, "You pay $100 a year for the lease of this land or you get off," and they were forced to pay this money.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MANN. On, the gentleman is made in the Mr. MILLER. No; I am not.

Mr. MANN. These people went to the Government. There are a large number of these islands up there. I do not know had the pleasure of reading the whether the gentleman has had the pleasure of reading the report of the Government concerning foxes raised up there; but if he has not, I commend it to him as a most interesting subject and a most interesting report. I have read it and

Mr. CALE. This lease was before the passage of this act.

Mr. MANN. They let the people up there raise foxes now without a lease and without paying rent because of the delinquency of Congress in not providing for a lease.

Mr. CALE. I do not know of any.

Mr. MILLER. Now?

Mr. MANN. Now.

Mr. MILLER. They can not under the law.
Mr. MANN. Why, they are squatters up there; that is what they are, and nobody is interfering with them.
Mr. MILLER. If the Government collects taxes from them, they must pay them; and there is no way to get it back, because it is illegally collected—

Mr. MANN. The Government collected its money for something which it now lets people get without collecting money.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no. Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It never leases those lands without it collects money for them. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to this state-

As the leases to Edstrom and Petersen, mentioned heretofore, were made subsequent to May 14, 1898, it appears to be held by the Solicitor of the Treasury that the sums paid were collected without authority. The money, however, had in the meantime been covered into the Treasury, from which it could be recovered only through an act of Congress, It would appear that Edstrom and Petersen now desire, through an act of Congress, to recover the $200 paid by them to the United States through Captain Kilgore.

And afterwards it was determined that they had no right under the law to collect those taxes, but they were paid into the Treasury of the United States, and now the Treasury Department admits that it is in the Treasury without any warrant of law and that the money of this people should be returned to them, and I think we ought to pay it back to them. That is my judgment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if there is any difference between raising foxes and raising stock, and if it is not a fact that the stockmen of the United States are using almost 100,000,000 acres without paying anything for it?

I will say that I do not believe in that policy. I think they ought to pay something for the use of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I strike hands with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. CALE. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield for just a moment?

Mr. MANN. I always yield to the distinguished gentleman. Mr. CALE. The gentleman from Illinois must remember that the fur-bearing business is just in its experimental stage. No-body who has gone into the business has made a dollar in it, and it is a serious question whether it will ever be a profitable in-dustry or not. These people went there to experiment, and it would take years and years before there would be any return for their investment under the most favorable circumstances. When they initiated this industry there—if I can use that term—they did not know. These are simply poor workmen who have spent their lives in Alaska, and they are miners and prospectors. They took this industry up believing that they could make it a profitable one.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to contend that anyone who starts the raising of foxes up there has to invest a considerable capital in the first place?

Mr. CALE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CALE. Perhaps I am, but I am telling the gentleman what I know about the facts.

Mr. MANN. I am telling the gentleman what I know about the report of the Government, which passed on all those questions up there and, I think, has given more investigation to it.

Mr. CALE. The gentleman has reference now, I think, to those who went into the business under the protection of the Government. That is true. These men went in on their own hook. They were squatters. They did not know that they would be obliged to pay a license or that a license was necessary. So they were in there some three years, and along came the Government and stated that they must pay a license. They the Government and stated that they must pay a license. did not know it before. Finally they did pay the license, and then the Government declared-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.
Mr. CALE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. If there was ever an honest claim presented to this House this is one of them.

LEASE WITH SENECA NATION OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19746) to ratify a certain lease with the Seneca Nation of Indians.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, that bill, I will state, was passed last winter. In the absence of my colleague, I move that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Has the bill become a law?

Mr. RYAN. Yes, sir.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will lie upon the table. There was no objection.

MYRA CLARK GAINES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6648) for the relief of the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines, deceased.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will withhold his objection until I can make a brief statement concerning the matter.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object.
Mr. ROBINSON. This claim originates in two grants made by the Spanish authorities while in possession of the territory in Louisiana in which the lands were embraced. The lands were conveyed to Daniel Clarke by Thomas Urquhart and John Lynde, the grantees, respectively, of the Spanish Government. Both the United States and Spain claimed the territory at that time, the United States claiming it under the treaty of 1803 and the Spanish Government claiming it by virtue of actual occupancy. In 1819 the controversies between Spain and the United States relative to titles in this territory and other territories in that locality were sought to be adjusted by what is known as the "Treaty of amity, settlements, and limits."

In that treaty is was specially stipulated on the part of the United States that the United States "shall ratify and confirm grants" made by the Spanish authority while in possession of the territory. In the case of Foster and Elma v. Neilson, Second Peters, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the language of the treaty did not of itself ratify these grants, but that it became a political question and required action upon the part of Congress. In 1860 Congress took that action by passing a statute expressly ratifying grants of this character.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman cite the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is in Second Peters. Congress, as I have stated, passed the statute of 1860 expressly ratifying and confirming these grants and providing a remedy for claimants, or, rather, two courses of procedure, at the election of claimants. One of those permitted the claimant to go before the commissioners at New Orleans and establish their claims and then have relief from Congress. The other provided that they might proceed in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction to establish their claims; and the statute provided the relief they should have, which is the same as that contemplated in this bill.

In the case of Lynde v, the United States, reported in Eleventh Wallace, these grants were expressly confirmed, and in case No. 622, in which there was an oral opinion, 10,000 arpents of the 50,000 granted to Urquhart were segregated and confirmed to Caleb Cushing, a very prominent lawyer, for his services rendered Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines. In the meantime almost endless litigation had arisen, involving the legitimacy of Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines. That question was finally determined in her favor by the United States Supreme Court in Twenty-fourth Howard, in Gaines v. Hennen, in which the court expressly held that she was the legitimate heir of Daniel Clarke. Subsequently Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines filed her claim before the commissioners at New Orleans.

The commissioners there found in her favor, but the Commissloner of the General Land Office, Mr. Drummond, rejected their report, for the reason that they had not certified to him certain documentary evidences. Subsequently, upon a hearing before a committee in Congress, it was made manifest that that evidence was actually supplied to the commissioners at New Orleans when they passed upon the matter; and Mr. Drummond said if the evidence had been before him at the time when he had jurisdiction of it and passed upon it he would probably have approved the claim.

The Congress of the United States has had consideration of this matter for a great many years. The claim originated in grants made in 1803 and 1806, when the original Spanish grants The claim has been favorably reported by commitwere made. tees of this House many times, and at one time passed the House of Representatives. It has never been unfavorably reported but once, and that action was taken by the Senate committee on the theory solely that Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines had not brought her claim within the statute of limitations fixed by the statute of 1860. It appears perfectly clear, however, from a careful investigation of the record, that she did bring her claim within the statute. The act of 1860 was rendered inoperative by the civil war, the limitation fixed in that act being five years. But Congress in 1867 extended the limitation three years, and before the expiration of the limitation fixed in the act of 1867 she filed her proof and secured the action that I have already detailed by the commissioners at New Orleans.

The case presents this peculiar aspect: That there seems to be upon the part of no one investigating this claim or who has ever considered it any reasonable doubt as to its validity. It has been before Congress from almost time immemorial. So far as the Government of the United States is concerned, its history is almost coextensive with it. I submit to this House that the time has come when some final action ought to be taken in this matter. I have no further statement, unless some gentleman of the House wishes further information upon the matter. The records I have referred to are, of course, voluminous. The decisions of the Supreme Court, which I have attempted to give the gist of, are very lengthy. The whole question is presented here, and the claim seems to be manifestly just by the unanimous reports by the committees of this House, and no question as to its validity seems ever to have been raised.

In my judgment there is no fair question of laches in the case, because the representatives of the claimant have been case, because the representatives of the claimant have been constantly and persistently pressing the claim for many, many years. I submit, in view of these considerations, that the claim ought to be approved. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JULIUS A. KAISER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12707) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. SABATH and Mr. MANN objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHICAGO, PEORIA AND ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY OF ILLINOIS,

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 60) for the relief of the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis Railway Company of Illinois.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis Railway Company of Illinois $2,835.45, being the amount of internal-revenue tax on certain high wines erroneously appropriated by the Navy Department at Indianhead.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, should like to ask the gentleman what this claim is for?

Mr. MILLER. The Standard Distilling and Distributing Company, a distillery at Pekin, Ill., on August 27, 1902, delivered to the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis Railway Company 84 barrels of alcohol for shipment to the National Distributing S4 parrels of alcohol for shipment to the National Distributing Company, of New York, for which alcohol they had paid a certain amount of tax. But there was a mistake made in the shipping bill, and 30 barrels of this alcohol were unloaded at Indianhead, Md., and used by the Government of the United States; and for that reason this company asks that the amount paid by them on this shipment be refunded to them, the alcohol having been used by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SABATH. What was it used for by the Government?

Mr. MANN. Smokeless powder.

Mr. MILLER. For making smokeless powder. There is no question about it being used by the Government of the United States. It was simply unloaded at the wrong place. It should have been shipped to the National Distributing Company, of New York, but was waybilled in error by the agent of the railway company, and 30 barrels of it were unloaded at Indianhead, and there used for the purpose of making powder by the Government of the United States; and being so used, it was not subject to taxation

Mr. SABATH. Why did not the Government pay this bill? Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, where the Government buys alcohol for use in making powder, there is no internal-revenue tax levied against that alcohol.

In this case the internal-revenue tax had been paid by the company that shipped the alcohol. The railroad company inadvertently delivered the alcohol to the Government instead of to the real consignee. The Government accepted the alcohol and used it and paid for it. Now, if the Government had purchased the alcohol in the market, the tax would have been relinquished, but this tax had been paid on this alcohol. The Government made use of it, just as though it had purchased it at the ordinary price.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Did the Government pay the same price for the alcohol that would have been paid if it had been received by a private party?

Mr. MANN. The Government paid the same price that it was paying for the other alcohol purchased by it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Government rates.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The owner of the alcohol lost the difference, then?

Mr. MACON. Is this claim for the difference between the amount the Government paid for it and the tax upon it at that

Mr. MANN. The claim is simply to refund the tax which was paid. If the Government had purchased the alcohol in the regular way, there would have been no tax upon it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. My question was whether the price received was the price of the alcohol plus the revenue that the distiller had paid.

Mr. MANN. When the Government paid for the alcohol, it only paid the price which it ordinarily paid, which is a smaller price, because of the fact that the alcohol purchased by the Government for this purpose does not pay the internal-revenue

Mr. MACON. This is simply for the difference between the amount the Government paid for it and that the railroad company had to pay, is it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow a ques-

Mr. MANN. Yes

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did the railroad company get mixed up in this?

Mr. MANN. Because the railroad by inadvertence delivered the alcohol to the wrong consignee, and the consignor held the railroad company responsible for it, and the railroad company

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But a railroad company does not pay the revenue tax-on the alcohol that it ships.

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did they happen to be paying it in this case? I thought the distiller paid it.
Mr. MANN. The distiller did pay it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then the distiller ought to have it back

Mr. MANN. He got it back from the railroad company. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did he get it back from the railroad company?

Mr. MANN. Because the railroad company had delivered it to the wrong consignee, and thereby the consignor received from the Government, not the price of the alcohol plus the internalrevenue tax, but only the price of the alcohol without regard to the internal-revenue tax, and he made a claim against the railroad company for the difference, and the railroad company paid it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course everybody that knows very much knows that alcohol used by the Government for making powder does not pay any revenue tax.

Mr. MANN. It does not. In this case the revenue tax was paid to the Government, and this is for the refund of it.

Mr. MACON. I would like to ask if this is not practically making the Government pay the internal-revenue tax on the

Not at all. The Government has already re-Mr. MANN. ceived the money for the internal-revenue tax and also used e alcohol.
Mr. MACON. And

And this is to refund the tax?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SIMON LONGNECKER AND ALBERT LONGNECKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18831) for the relief of Simon Longnecker, of El Paso, Tex., and Albert Longnecker, of Galveston, Tex.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Simon Longnecker, of El Paso, Tex., and Albert Longnecker, of Galveston, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,550, as rent of the city stable in Lavaca, Tex., from the 9th day of July, 1865, to December 14, 1865, as found and determined by a board of survey appointed and assembled for the purpose of investigating and adjusting claims against the United States Government by citizens of Lavaca, Tex., which board of survey met and adjusted said claim on December 14, 1865, and adjudicated said claim in favor of William Longnecker, then a citizen of Lavaca, Tex., but who has since then died, leaving Simon Longnecker and Albert Longnecker is only heirs at law.

With the following committee amendments:

With the following committee amendments:

Amend by inserting therein, after the words "Galveston, Tex.," in line 5, the words "only heirs at law of William Longnecker, of Lavaca, Tex., deceased."

That said bill be further amended by striking out all of said bill after the word "of," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "$375 for the rent, use, and occupancy of the city stable in Lavaca, Tex., owned by the said William Longnecker, deceased, from August 16, 1865, to August 31, 1866, which sum shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims for the rent, use, and occupancy of the aforesaid stable."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES S. CLARK.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7098) for the relief of James S. Clark.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James S. Clark, of Fayette County, Ky., the sum of $1,886, in full compensation for personal property taken and used and damages done in the use and occupation of real estate, all belonging to the said James S. Clark, by the Army of the United States during the Spanish-American war, in the months of August, September, October, November, and December, 1898, in and about the establishment and maintenance of a military camp at Camp Hamilton, in said county and State.

With the following amendments:

Amend by inserting after the word "to," in line 5, the words "the legal representatives of." Strike out, in lines 6 and 7, the words "one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two hundred and fifty."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of James S. Clark, deceased."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

RACHEL PARKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19275) for the relief of Rachel Parker.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it cnacted, ctc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Rachel Parker, widow of Wilson Parker, deceased, late of Company G. Forty-sixth Regiment U. S. Colored Troops, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $865.67, it being for pay of soldier, bounty, clothing, pay and travel allowances due to the said Wilson Parker at the date of his muster out of service, to wit, February 16, 1866.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont if he personally is fully satisfied that this claim ought to be paid? Mr. HASKINS. I sent to the War Department and to the Treasury Department and procured every paper that bore upon the case and made a personal examination of it. I sat up two nights making the examination, and became thoroughly convinced of the justice of this claim, and that the pay roll was a fabrication. It is clearly so, otherwise I would not have reported it.

Mr. MANN. I have read the gentleman's report with a good deal of care. It looked to me very much as if this man enlisted, was immediately captured, taken to southern Texas, and there went to work for anybody that would give him employ-ment. Meanwhile, somebody did take the money that would be due him if he had served, his name being still carried on the pay roll. I say frankly that while it did not seem very strong to me, I would take the opinion of the gentleman from Vermont upon the matter.

Mr. MACON. Let me ask the gentleman, Is this an attempt to pay this money a second time?

Mr. MANN. These are the facts, briefly stated: A colored man, a slave, I suppose, did enlist in the army, was shortly thereafter captured and taken to Texas. Some years after

Mr. MACON. He did not serve in the army?
-Mr. MANN. He was a prisoner. Some time after that somebody signed for the money in his name on the pay roll and obtained it

Mr. MACON. Was he entitled to the money at all? Mr. MANN. The War Department says he was. He was still carried on the pay roll because he was a prisoner.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman state that anyone can be entitled to compensation for services at the hands of the Government when he was not in the service?

Mr. MANN. I think it is the custom, and it was the practice during the war, where a man was captured as a prisoner, to pay him as though he was in the active service.

What amount does this bill carry? Mr. MACON.

Mr. MANN. Eight hundred and sixty-five dollars and sixtyseven cents.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman from Illinois says that he was working down in Texas for whoever would employ him. Mr. MANN. I did not make that statement as a fact; that is not the evidence.

Mr. HASKINS. I want to say that that $865 includes $200 bounty that was due him. While he was captured the evidence shows that he was placed in slavery on a plantation with Captain Stone of the Texas cavalry that captured him, and that he remained there until his death, from the time he enlisted up to the time he died.

The evidence in the War Department that was filed there in behalf of this man's pay and bounty showed conclusively these facts, and the War Department refused to make the allowance for the reason of that invariable rule which prevails in the department that they will not go back on their own records, but referred the man to Congress for relief.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this claim ought to have been paid in the first instance. I do not think the claimant was entitled to any compensation, under the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and certainly I do not think the Government ought to pay a claim twice when the claimant was not entitled to it in the first instance, and I therefore object.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will receive the statement of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] as to the facts, and not lay that blame upon me. I do not want to be responsible for the statement of facts.

Mr. HASKINS. Why does the gentleman from Arkansas say that he was not entitled to anything in the first instance?

Mr. MACON. Because he never served as a soldier.

Mr. HASKINS. Oh, he was regularly enlisted and served as a soldier.

Mr. MACON. He did not even serve ninety days.

Mr. HASKINS. And then was captured by the Confederate cavalry under command of Captain Stone, of Texas, taken into the State of Texas, and put on Captain Stone's plantation, where he continued to work.

Mr. ADAIR. Would he be entitled to a bounty under the

Mr. HASKINS. Yes; $200 bounty under two different acts

Mr. ADAIR. And $100 is the part asked for in this bill?
Mr. HASKINS. Two hundred dollars.
Mr. MACON. I want to understand further. How long is it proposed to pay him for?

Mr. HASKINS. For the time that the pay roll shows he was mustered out.

Mr. MACON. How long was that? Mr. HASKINS. He was taken prisoner of war in 1863.

Mr. MANN. Up to 1867. Mr. MACON. The war was practically ended on the 9th of April, 1865.

Mr. HASKINS. From 1863 to 1866.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engressment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the bill which has just been passed. want to amend by unanimous consent by striking out the words "Rachel Parker" and inserting in lieu thereof "the legal representative.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont to offer an amendment at this time?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment, and the order passing the bill will be vacated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 4, the words "Rachel Parker, widow," and insert in lieu thereof the words "legal representative"—

Also amend the title.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and pasesd.

The title was amended.

JAMES H. DE COSTER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5728) for the relief of James H. De Coster.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $476.31 to James H. De Coster, postmaster at Mechanic Falls, Androscoggin County, Me., for postage stamps, specie, money-order specie, 1 registered tetre, and 1 registered package stolen from the post-office at Mechanic Falls aforesaid on May 30, 1900.

With the following amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "seventy-six" and insert in place thereof "sixty-five."

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "thirty-one" and insert in place thereof "ninety-five." so that the total amount will read "$465.95."

Page 1, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "specie, one registered letter, and one registered package," and insert in place thereof "post-office funds."

Page 1, at the end of line 11, insert the words "and charged to James H. De Coster and paid for by him in his settlement with the Post-Office Department."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 14236) for the relief of The Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. This is a bill with a committee amendment which strikes out a preamble and all after the enacting clause and substitutes a new text therefor. Without objection, the Clerk will read the substitute in the nature of an amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the substitute,

as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to redeem a certain duplicate United States bond issued in place of a certain United States bond. No. 10307, for $10,000, under act of July 14, 1870 (consols of 1907), inscribed in the name of the Dutchess County Mutual Insurance Company and assigned in blank and lost or destroyed on or about the 24th day of July, 1888, which said duplicate bond is registered in the name of the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay in full redemption and satisfaction of said bond and duplicate to the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, forthwith, the sum of $10,000, together with interest, if any, accrued thereon at 4 per cent per annum to the 1st day of July, 1907, the date when said bond was called for redemption and payment: Provided, however, That the indemnity bond executed and filed by the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., pursuant to the terms of said act of Congress passed the 21st day of May, 1888, shall remain as a continuing liability to secure the United States from any loss, cost, damages, or claims made on account of said original bond.

SEC. 3. That is act shall take effect immediately upon passage and approval of same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question or two. Was this a registered bond or a coupon bond?

Mr. WALDO. It was a registered bond. A duplicate bond was issued, and under the terms of the act that duplicate bond is in the Treasury, and it can not be paid without the passage of an enabling act, although it has already been called in for redemption.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When was this bond destroyed?

Mr. WALDO. In 1880, if I recollect.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have they been drawing interest on it ever since?

Mr. WALDO. The interest has never been paid.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought the bill provided that interest should be paid at the rate of 4 per cent from 1898.

Mr. WALDO. Possibly I may be mistaken about that, but I know that there is some accrued interest for several years that has not been paid. Whatever it is, the records of the Government show. This bill provides only for the payment of such interest as has not been paid.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What kind of a bond do they get. Mr. WALDO. The bond is a bond given by this bank with sureties. I have never seen the bond which the department now has under the former bill. This provides that the bond shall continue.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The average bond is not worth a straw after four years.

Mr. WALDO. The bond specified is good; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is good, maybe it will be good for four years.

Mr. WALDO. Here is a registered bond, and it is almost impossible that a bond registered in the name of this bank should come into the hands of anybody else by which any liability could accrue against the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The history of the probate court shows that the average bond is of no account at all after the end of four years.

Mr. WALDO. That may be true, but this bond is good. Mr. MANN. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that the bill does not provide for the payment of 4 per cent interest except to the date of when they made the call for redemption, 1897. It does not provide for payment of interest since that time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I asked him was, and what he did not know was, whether they drew interest on this registered bond from the time they allege it was lost up to 1897, when it was called in for redemption.

Mr. WALDO. My understanding is they have now. I have forgotten it; I have not looked it up for some time. Mr. ADAIR. Does this bill provide interest since the call for redemption? Mr. WALDO. No, sir; up to the call, which had not been paid.

Mr. MANN. Probably the last six months' interest was due.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This bond was lost a great many years, some thirty years ago, and they never said a word about the bond being lost, but went on and drew interest on the bond until it was called for redemption.

Mr. WALDO. Oh, no; the original bill was passed---

Mr. MANN. This bond was lost, as shown here, somewhere about 1888, and thereupon they secured an act of Congress

Mr. WALDO. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Authorizing the issuance of a duplicate bond. That duplicate bond was issued, and as an additional security to the Government, besides taking the ordinary form of bond, the original duplicate $10,000 bond was retained in the hands of the United States Treasurer. That came due in 1897, and it can not be paid because the Government is holding it for security for the loss of the original bond, lost a great many

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is all as clear as mud. Mr. ADAIR. If the original bond should be found, it could not be used by anybody, as it is a registered bond.

Mr. WALDO. No; or in payment of a demand by anybody.

Mr. MANN. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. ADAIR. Let me ask the gentleman, what is the purpose of a registered bond if it is not for the purpose of protecting the owner of the bond?

Mr. MANN. There is that protection to a certain degree, but not absolutely.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the language of the bill where they refer to the terms of "said" act, line 23, page 3, no act having been referred to previously. I suppose they thought or figured that upon the "whereas." I move to strike out the word "said" in line 23, page 3, and insert the word "the."

Mr. MILLER. There is no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 23, strike out the word "said" and insert the word

Mr. MANN. Now, may I ask the gentleman whether he thinks it is possible for Congress by a law to change the obligation of the bond first given in this case?

Mr. WALDO. My view, when we first drew that substitute, was that it should provide, without any question, that the bank must remain responsible on the bond. It probably would in any event without that provision; but that if the Solicitor of the Treasury had any doubt as to the continuance of the liability of the sureties, he would take the proper course which would compel them to remain liable.

Well, the Solicitor of the Treasury has no option Mr. MANN. We say in the law what he shall do. Now, here in the matter. is the situation: Originally there was a bond lost. Congress provided for the issuance of a new bond and provided for two methods of securing protection to the Government. One was by retaining the bond itself—that is, the registered bond—and the other by having the parties give an indemnity bond. Now, can we give up half of that security and then hold the sureties on the indemnity bond?

Mr. WALDO. Let me say to the gentleman, in the first place, that I think in the case of the loss of a registered bond the Government is under no risk to pay to the registered owner of the bond. That is the first proposition. That is the purpose of the register. Now, in the next place, in order that the security that had been taken under the act of 1808 might continue, that provision was put in there. My own view of it is, and I think that is what the gentleman himself would do if he was the treasurer, if he had any question about it, would be to take the statement from the bank and from the sureties on the bond that they recognized the obligation imposed by this proposed There is no question but what they could do that. My own view of it is that it is an excess of precaution to take that step at all.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I do not know whether this was a registered bond, unless the gentleman knows it personally.

Mr. WALDO. The records show that. The report of the department shows it, too.

Mr. MANN. The report of the committee does not show it. If there is no liability on the loss of a registered bond, why do the department and Congress require not only the retention of the new bond that was issued, but also the giving of an indemnity bond?

Mr. WALDO. I presume the purpose was to save any question that might arise on the floor here, and it was for that purpose that I left that obligation in the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I am not talking about the gentleman's obliga-I am asking him in reference to the original act requiring both forms of suretyship.

Mr. WALDO. Of course, I was not in Congress at that time, and can not state exactly what was in their minds; but I presume that through excess of caution, as I have stated, they put in that provision. That is the only explanation that I can make

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman prepared to say to Congress now, in connection with his own bill, that there can be no loss to the Government where a registered bond is lost?

Mr. WALDO. Not if the payment is made to the registered That is my understanding of it.

Mr. MANN. It can not be made to the registered owner if the bond is lost. Mr. WALDO. Certainly it can. The registry continues whether the bond is lost or not. Mr. MANN. The Government never pays a registered bond without the protection of a bond.

Mr. WALDO. The provision of law for the registry of a bond was made-and the register of a bond, when it is done voluntarily, is done-for the express purpose of prohibiting anybody getting the money except the registered owner, and so the bank will be secure in paying to the registered owner.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 23, page 3, strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the" before the word "act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. CURRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17171) for the relief of Benjamin F. Curry.

The bill was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17171) for the relief of Benjamin F. Curry.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow on the accounts of Benjamin F. Curry, postmaster at Hamlin, W. Va., a credit of $198.50, for money stolen from said post-office by burglars December 27, 1905.

Also the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "ninety-eight" and insert in lieu thereof the words "eighty-nine."
Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ninety-nine."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken and the amendments were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

PETER M'ENERY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16696) for the relief of the estate of Peter McEnery, deceased. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16696) for the relief of the estate of Peter McEnery, deceased.

deceased.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Peter McEnery, deceased, late of Petersburg, Va., the sum of $97.80, for rent of storehouses used by the military authorities of the United States from April 6 to May 26, 1865.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN O. KINNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13244) to place upon the muster-in rolls the name of John O. Kinney

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman in charge of the bill tell us why this man should be put on the roll.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to this bill by striking out on the second page, third line, the word "November" and inserting the word "January;" and in the fourth line strike out the word "two" and insert in place thereof the word "three."

Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object.
The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts please restate his amendment?

Mr. TIRREILL. My amendment is as follows: Strike out the word "November," in line 3, on the second page, and insert in lieu thereof the word "January;" and in the fourth line strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, strike out the word "November" and insert the word "January;" in line 4 strike out "two" and insert "three."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? This is the third attempt to get the date right. Is the gentleman sure it is now right?

Mr. TIRRELL. Well, I will state the record, but it will take some little time.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure the date is now right?

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes; it is.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman introduced the bill with one date, the committee passed upon that date and proposed an amendment, and now the gentleman proposes an amendment to that amendment. Now, is he sure the date is right?

Mr. TIRRELL. I am sure.

Mr. MACON. I wanted an explanation as to why he should be put on the roll.

Mr. TIRRELL. On the 3d day of September, 1862, a military company was organized in the town of Winchendon, Mass., and from there they were taken to Camp Stevens, at Groton Junction, Mass.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if this bill is now being considered?

The SPEAKER. No; it is not. Consent for its consideration has not been given.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the point of order against the gentleman who has reserved the right to object. I submit, sir, that under the order that can not be

The SPEAKER. Not if anybody objects. Does the gentle-man from Iowa object? That would be objecting to the consideration.

Mr. MACON. I will meet the objection of the gentleman from Iowa by objecting to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is all I want; one way or the other.

I am against this very grotesque performance

Mr. MANN. That is no more in order than the other.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). Of reserving the right to object, then consuming time in explanations, and then objecting.

Mr. MANN. That is six of one and half a dozen of the other. Mr. MACON. If the Chair will indulge me.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent.

Mr. MACON. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that my sole purpose in reserving the right to object is to put myself in a position to object intelligently, and that I can not do without explanation. If the gentleman wants to prevent an opportunity for intelligent objection, I will say another kind of objection will be made, for I will not sit in my seat and allow bills to go through without knowing something about them. It is for the sole purpose of voting intelligently upon these matters that I have reserved the right to object.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not the slightest desire to control the gentleman in the matter. He may vote unintelligently if he desires to. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again to the House, if the Chair may be indulged, that a practice has grown up touching unanimous consent, by unanimous consent for brief questions and answers; but if objection is made, of course that is a withdrawal of unanimous consent. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 369) referring certain claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, to save time, for the present I shall object.

HARTSHORNE, OKLA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4289) for the relief of the people of Hartshorne, Okla.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, to save the time of the House I will state that this matter was incorporated in what is known as the "Indian omnibus bill," section 14, and I ask unanimous consent that it be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

ROBERT MORGAN GILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3952) to restore to the active list of the United States Marine Corps the name of Robert Morgan Gilson.

The bill was read. Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NEBRASKA MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5573) for the relief of the Nebraska Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Stromsburg, Nebr.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

RICHARD HALEY AND FAMILY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10714) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enroll Richard Haley and his family as Choctaw Indians.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON and Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia objected.

CERTAIN SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17191) to confer jurisdiction, legal and equitable, upon the Court of Claims in the matter of the claims of certain Shawnee Indians to be enrolled as Cherokees, under treaty of July 19, 1866, agreement of June 7, 1869, the act of October 1, 1890, and decrees of the courts thereunder, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. CARTER. I object.

ROBERT S. DAME AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21895) for the relief of Robert S. Dame and others, and for

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a long omnibus bill. It has a lot of items in it which I think are improper and, to save time, I shall object.

VELVIA TUCKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8448) to pay Velvia Tucker arrears of pension due her father, William N. Tucker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Velvia Tucker, daughter of William N. Tucker, late of Captain Brown's company B. Second New York Heavy Artillery, $70, the arrears of pension due said soldier at date of Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask how the Committee on War Claims got jurisdiction of a bill of this kind?

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill provides for the payment of $70 to Velvia Tucker, only daughter of a soldier, William N. Tucker, who died some ten years ago. This lady was the only child left to take care of her father, and she performed that duty faithfully. Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not answering the question I asked. Under what theory did this bill go to the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. This is a claim growing out of the civil ar. The Committee on Pensions could not adjudicate it.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Claims could adjudicate it. This does not grow out of the civil war at all. It grows out of the act of Congress providing for pensions; but if the gentleman believes it belongs to the Committee on War Claims, I shall not make any point of order on it. I think, however, this is one of the cases where gentlemen find it convenient to refer claim bills to their own committees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOSEPH SWISHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9617) for the relief of Joseph Swisher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joseph Swisher, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $109.87, said sum being the amount withheld for tools lost in battle in the settlement of the account of said Joseph Swisher as captain in the One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and quartermaster of the Second Brigade, Second Division, Fourteenth Army Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN T. FREEMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21571) for the relief of John T. Freeman.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $447.81 to John T. Freeman, chief musician, Seventh Artillery Band, U. S. Army, in full payment on account of articles, the property of said Freeman, destroyed by fire at Fort Slocum, N. Y., March 30, 1899, as found due and recommended by a board of survey appointed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MACON. Not being allowed to make an inquiry about the bill, I will object.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is allowed to make inquiry. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. How can the gentleman be prevented from making an inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not at this time prevented from making inquiry. Unless there is objection, he can inquire.

Mr. MACON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the right to object, for the purpose of having the gentleman in charge of the bill explain its merits. If it is meritorious, I want it to pass.

Mr. HASKINS. I made the report on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. HASKINS. I yield.

Mr. MACON. I want the gentleman to explain the merits of the bill. If it is meritorious I want it to pass

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I think the bill is meritorious. This man had furniture in an administration building that was burned. This follows the custom that we have followed for years, of paying a man for furniture so de-Mr. MACON. I want to know why it was there.
Mr. MANN. He was an officer of the army.
Mr. MACON. The gentleman does not insist that it is proper for the Government to pay for all property that it may be housing without expense to officers, does he?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that for many years Congress has followed the practice of passing these bills that came before it—whether a right practice or not—where the army officer had some of his personal belongings in a building or vessel owned by the Government, and the building burned, or the vessel burned, the Government reimbursed him for the actual loss of the property. We have passed a number of bills of that kind at this session of Congress.

Mr. MACON. I think I objected to some of that very character two weeks ago, and to be consistent I will have to object to this.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may have objected to those bills, but the bills were passed.

Mr. BONYNGE. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that it was a bill of mine that he objected to, and afterwards he withdrew his objection.

Mr. MACON. Then in order to be consistent, Mr. Speaker, I will have to withdraw this objection. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. SMITHEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 421 (in lieu of H. R. 21781), referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William F. Smithey.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 21781) for the relief of William F. Smithey, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I reserve the right to object. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This is a claim of $200 or $300 for feed taken during the war. It is to be referred to the Court of Claims-this one and the next one right under it. It is supported by affidavit as to the value of the property and the loyalty of the claimant.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit that we are having an object lesson here to-day which I have had in mind for a long time, which shows when you get down to dealing squarely with the people of the country under the rules of this House, we do not do it. I submit to this House whether it is right, whoever the gentleman is, whether myself or any other gentleman, by simply rising and saying "I object," and thereby defeat the consideration of a claim and stifle the voice of some unfortunate man, woman, or child somewhere in the United States. There should be some other rule by which the people can have their claims considered and paid by this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOSEPH S. MUSTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the House resolution 422 (in lieu of H. R. 21782), referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Joseph S. Muster.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 21782) for the relief of Joseph S. Muster, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

GEORGE W. WICKES.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18639) for the relief of George W. Wickes.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MACON. I object.

WILLIAM PARKER SEDGWICK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 22017) for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick and others, and for other purposes

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MANN. To save time, Mr. Speaker, as this is an omnibus bill, I object.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, that bill was passed six weeks

Mr. MANN. It was passed at the last session of Congress in another bill.

The SPEAKER. Has this bill been enacted into law?

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, that the bill lie on the table

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

LEVI J. BILLINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8739) for relief of Levi J. Billings.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some explanation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, let me explain that bill. This is a bill for the relief of a soldier who was serving in the war at Corinth just prior to the battle. He was promoted to second lieutenant. He did not receive his commission at that time. He was promoted to a lieutenant in another regiment and he had to go back to Wisconsin and receive his commission and join the other company. Now, he did not receive his pay as a private, neither did he receive his pay as a lieutenant during His pay as a private ceased on his appointment as this time. a second lieutenant, but on account of the fact that he did not join his company at once, on account of the fact that he was not cowardly, but stayed at the front, he did not receive his pay as a lieutenant.

Mr. MACON. Was there not a law authorizing the pay of lieutenants then?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly, there was.

He did not have his commission. Mr. ANSBERRY.

Mr. MORSE. He had not accepted his commission.

Mr. MACON. Then the gentleman wants him to be paid for services before he accepted the commission?

Mr. MORSE. No; I do not want him to be paid-

Mr. MACON. Or before he performed the services?

No-yes, in a sense; before he performed them. Mr. MORSE.

Mr. MACON. That is it.
Mr. MORSE. Well, he was serving and did not receive a penny for that service, and then he was in the hospital for part of that time.

Mr. MACON. Why does not the gentleman try to pass a bill to pay him for his services as a private instead of a lieutenant?

Mr. MORSE. Because he had been appointed a lieutenant, Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, to save time, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MARY S. FERGUSSON.

The next business was the bill (S. 6529) for the relief of Mary S. Fergusson.

The Clerk read the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MACON. I object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman not reserve his objection?

Mr. MACON. Oh, yes; I reserve the objection.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I think that the objection which the gentleman from Arkansas proposes to make is owing to his belief that the services rendered by Arthur Fergusson in the Philippines were for the Philippine government, and that, therefore, only the Philippine government ought the Philippine government ought to pay him. Mr. Speaker, the services of Arthur Fergusson in the Philippines were rendered in a very especial degree for the Government of the United States. In the Philippines and else-where they were services for the Government of the United States, which the Philippine Commission; which Justice Gray, formerly of the United States Senate; which John Bassett Moore; Secretary of War Wright, formerly governor-general of the Philippines; and everybody familiar with his services know and declare could not have been rendered by any other man. The Philippine Commission, by proclamation, ordered a day of general mourning for his death.

Secretary Taft, when Secretary of War, last spring called the attention of the Nation to the services rendered by Arthur Fergusson, declaring that they had been indispensable in bringing about harmonious relations between the Filipinos and the American Government in the Philippine Islands. He served us during the negotiations which resulted in the treaty of Paris. his services being so splendid that on motion of Mr. Rios, one of the representatives of Spain, Arthur Fergusson, an American. was made the official interpreter for the joint commission.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the amount embodied in this bill provided to be paid to the widow of Mr. Fergusson intended as a compensation for services rendered by Mr. Fergusson?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is to be paid by the United States, not in compensation, but as only a very slight recognition of the immeasurable value of the work done by that man for the Government of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. In other words, it is a donation, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is a donation to the widow of a man who did something for the United States. We did not hesitate to give hundreds of thousands of dollars to Italians three or four thousand miles from this country, who had never done anything for us. We made them the beneficiaries of our This man served his country faithfully and well at a time and under circumstances and with results which entitle his poor widow to call upon the generosity of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for one further question? I simply want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that what the Government did for the Italians was done because of great calamity. Does any such calamity exist in this case?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In just a moment I will answer that question before I finish.

Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MANN.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the services, however estimable, which this gentleman rendered to the Government are valuable enough to probably cost the Government in the end $10,000,000 or more, as this precedent would cost?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that argument of precedent, I should say that it never has appealed to me. I never could understand why, if I voted—

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, it appeals to me, and I ob-

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?
Mr. MILLER. I understand that the bill under consideration is objected to.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit—
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me,
I would be glad to have the discussion continue, but there are a large number of bills on this calendar. I have none of them. and am not interested in any, but I think every Member is entitled to have his bill reached.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Kansas permit me to answer the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois, as to whether I do not think that this will make a dangerous precedent?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, I would; but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois objects. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

JAMES H. DOYLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21783) for the relief of the legal representatives of James H. Doyle, deceased.

The bill was read.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I object. The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

M. H. PLUNKETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8277) placing M. H. Plunkett, assistant engineer, United States Navy, on the retired list with an advanced rank.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object,
I would like to have somebody give some reason why this bill or similar bills

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been read yet.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Well, its purports are shown by its title, but I am willing to wait for it to be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the report read. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN A. TAFT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 483) for the relief of John A. Taft.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 7479) for the relief of John A. Taft, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM FRANCIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 484) for the relief of William Francis.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 23799) for the relief of William Francis, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

GEORGE W. AND RICHARD B. COOPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 485) for the relief of the estates of George W. and Richard B. Cooper, deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 25189) for the relief of the estates of George W. and Richard B. Cooper, deceased, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEVI ADCOCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 486) for the relief of Levi Adcock.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 3766) for the relief of Levi Adcock, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

C. W. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20613) to compensate C. W. Smith for services and disbursements made in the war with Spain.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to C. W. Smith, of Tampa, Fla., out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $192, to compensate him for services rendered to and advances made for the United States during the late war with Spain.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some gentleman if this matter ever went to the Navy Department or if there ever was an opinion from the Navy Department in reference to it?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this is for services rendered by this man as quartermaster. see it is stated in the report that the papers have been lost. The papers were sent to Representative Sparkman, a Representative from Florida, and he vouches for the gentleman's integrity and that the papers are now lost.

Mr. MANN. Here is a claim that the man performed certain services for the navy. Now, I want to know whether this bill for this claim was ever referred to the Navy Department to get their side of the question.

Mr. BIRDSALL. I can answer that, if the gentleman from Iowa will permit.

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to get the information.

Mr. BIRDSALL. The claim was referred to the Navy Department; but the difficulty of this allowance arose from the fact that this man had served two months before the enlistment officer mustered him in, and then he was found to be too old and was rejected. In the meantime he had rendered these services. The claim has been referred to the Navy Department, and they said that they had no jurisdiction, because it did not appear that this man had ever been enrolled in the service, and the claim would have to come to Congress.

Mr. HAUGEN. He could not be enrolled on account of his age

Mr. MANN. Here is a proposition to pay a man who claims pay for services performed for the navy, and I want to know if it has been referred to the Navy Department.

Mr. HAUGEN. The report of the committee is that the bill has never been referred-

Mr. BIRDSALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it has been referred to the Navy Department, and the gentleman from Iowa answered that question.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Iowa said that the claim had been taken up by the department and rejected. Has the committee any information upon this bill being referred to the Navy Department?

Mr. HAUGEN. The information that the committee got from the Navy Department was this, that this man's claim, he says, is based as quartermaster, that he was detailed by the Navy Department to serve as quartermaster, and upon the application to be mustered in he was found to be too old, and he could not be mustered in, so there is no question about the services and the claim.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think there is a decided question about the services. If the Navy Department employed him, it ought to pay him; but if the Navy Department did not employ him, probably he ought not to be paid; but certainly we ought to have the information now whether the Navy Department did employ him. I could not hear what my distinguished friend from Iowa said, although I am not very far away from him, except I understood him to say the claim had been rejected by the Navy Department.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was rejected; that is true. But the claimant here was detailed to do this certain service.

Mr. MANN. Will either of the gentlemen from Iowa state, on his own knowledge of the case or personal knowledge of the papers, that this man was, in fact, employed or engaged by a proper official of the Navy Department?

Mr. HAUGEN. I so understand it.
Mr. BIRDSALL. Mr. Smith was a member of the Florida
Naval Reserves, residing at Tampa. The services of this organization was tendered, as I understand it, by the governor of Florida to the Government.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not wish to take the time of the committee discussing the matter. asked the gentleman whether he knows from his knowledge of the case if this gentleman was in fact employed by the Navy Department to do this work?

Mr. BIRDSALL. He was; and his services were accepted. Mr. MANN. Then I make no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

HENRY A. TOLBERT.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1004, the bill H. R. 7048.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7048) for the relief of Henry A. Tolbert.

Mr. MACON. I will have to object, I think.

CLARK of Missouri. I want to say that I objected to that this morning; but I have studied about it and gotten the hang of it, and I think I was wrong.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. MACON. I object to the return.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration?
Mr. MILLER. That can be determined afterwards. I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1004.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object to that, because I do not think it is fair to claims ahead of us to go back now to claims that we have passed over. If the gentleman will couple with his request that we go back and refer the omnibus war claims resolution-

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I will be glad to ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of any of these claims where the objection is withdrawn by the party making the objection.

Mr. MACON. We have a war claims resolution on the calendar to refer to the Court of Claims, and I am trying to get back to that as fast as I can.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to returning to the bill referred to?

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the objection.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to its consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF JENKINS & HAVENS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25361) for the relief of the heirs of Jenkins & Havens.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object. Mr. MANN. I am going to object.

W. D. FARRON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 495) for the relief of W. D. Farron.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 495.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 16924) for the relief of W. D. Farron, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CHARLES W. MUNN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 496.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 496.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 24503) for the relief of Charles W. Munn, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-Intion.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

DAVIS W. HATCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was House resolution 497.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 497.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 24107) for the relief of Davis W. Hatch, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MAJ. C. DE W. WILCOX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5989) authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Maj. C. De W. Wilcox decoration and diploma presented by the Government of France.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Maj. C. De W. Wilcox, U. S. Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration and diploma of Officier d'Académie tendered to him, through the Department of State of the United States, by the Government of the French Republic; and the Department of State is hereby authorized to deliver to him the seld decoation and diploma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 26245) for the benefit of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ADDISON L. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12080) for the relief of Addison L. Brown.

The bill was read.

Mr. MACON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2911) for the relief of the Columbus Gas and Fuel Company.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). Is there objection to the present consideration?

Mr. MACON. I will reserve the right to object, if the gentleman cares to be heard upon the claim.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sees no one rising to Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia (rising). I object, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

LOGAN NATURAL GAS AND FUEL COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3748) for the relief of the Logan Natural Gas and Fuel Company of Columbus, Ohio.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I object to that also, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

WILLIAM J. CUSSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1622) for the relief of the estate of William J. Cussen.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a judgment recovered in favor of the United States against William J. Cussen and Nicholas A. Cullen in the circuit court for the eastern district of Virginia on the 31st day of January, 1870, for the sum of $1,968 and $40.40 costs, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be released and satisfied as to the estate of the said William J. Cussen, now deceased, and as to any estate, real or personal, acquired by the said Cussen subsequent to the date of the said judgment and allened by him to others during his lifetime or owned by him at the time of his death, and the United States attorney for the eastern district of Virginia is hereby authorized and directed to mark on the order book of the court where the said judgment is recovered that the same has been satisfied.

The SPEAKER protesting in the same chicatter?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. I would like to hear an explanation of the bill, and I reserve the right to object until I can hear something about it.

Mr. MILLER. I do not notice the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Lamb] who introduced the bill.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman can explain the bill.
Mr. MILLER. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the facts here. This is a matter that came to our committee with a recommendation in which the Department of Justice said, "The case is undoubtedly a meritorious one, but requires the action of Congress." This is a clear case: there is no question about its merits. It is a very lengthy case and will require a long time to explain the facts of the case. I want to say to the gentleman if he will read the report carefully he will vote for the passage of the bill. I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], who will explain the matter.

Mr. MACON. Just give the facts in the case.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, this is a case which authorizes no appropriation of money at all. It is only asking for the satisfaction of judgment which now stands as a cloud upon the title to certain land in the city of Richmond, so that there will be relief. This man was declared a bankrupt twenty to thirty years ago. It turned out afterwards that he had been security on an official bond, for which a fieri facias had been issued and returned "no effects." The judge of the court and the clerk of the court are both dead. Investigations have been made, and no evidence of the judgment can be found at all.

Then the lawyers sought relief at the Department of Justice, and here is the reply of that department:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, June 12, 1906.

Washington, June 12, 1996.

GENTLEMEN: In the matter of the petition presented by you seeking relief on behalf of the Millhiser Manufacturing Company from the execution of a judgment entered in favor of the United States against William J. Cussen and Nicholas C. Mills in the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Virginia on the 31st day of January, 1870, the department advises you that after a careful consideration of all the facts it is clearly of opinion that the case is not one in which the department is authorized to afford relief.

The case is undoubtedly a meritorious one, but requires the action of Congress.

of Congress. Respectfully,

M. D. PURDY, Acting Attorney-General.

Messrs. Guy & Guy, Attorneys at Law, Richmond, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

C. F. SUGG.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 16551) to pay to C. F. Sugg, of Hales Point, Lauderdale County, Tenn., $79.95, for damages inflicted upon gasoline steamer Clyde by light-house tender Oleander.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to C. F. Sugg, of Hales Point, Lauderdale County, Tenn., the sum of $79.95; in full payment of his claim for damages inflicted upon the gasoline steamer Clyde by the light-house tender Oleander on the 3d day of August, 1907.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CERTAIN NAVAL CLAIMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 26975) to pay certain claims against the Government arising in the Navy Department.

The Clerk began reading the bill.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a very long bill, and I am going to object to its present consideration.

Mr. WALDO. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that objection. This bill covers a number of small claims from the Navy Department, payment of which is requested by the department. partment

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas has objected.

Mr. WALDO. I will ask him to withhold his objection.
Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I am very anxious to get back to the war claims resolution that has been objected to, and I do not see any way to get back to it if we read long bills now.

Mr. WALDO. Here are 28 claimants-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has objected, and has not withdrawn his objection. The Clerk will read the next bill.

MARTHA E. WEST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3674) for the relief of Martha E. West.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of $1,500 of Martha E. West, for lumber composing a sawmill and taken in 1865 by United States troops in the Sioux Indian war in Minnesota and used for the construction of a stable, is hereby referred for adjudication on principles upon which claims were paid by the commission under act of Congress of February 16, 1863, to the Court of Claims, which may regard as competent evidence any affidavits or papers relating to the claim and on fle in the departments or in the courts, and give such weight thereto as is proper. Any judgment rendered by the court for the claimant shall be paid to her or to her personal representative out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ESTATE OF T. J. SEMMES, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24105) for the relief of the estate of T. J. Semmes, deceased. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Myra E. Semmes, executrix and sole legatee of T. J. Semmes, late of New Orleans, deceased, $395.55 in full payment for rents collected by the United States during the civil war from property owned by the said T. J. Semmes and situate at New Orleans, La.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

A. M. DARLING AND F. C. DARLING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3670) for the relief of A. M. Darling and F. C. Darling. The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN. I object.

HORACE B. GARDNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 510, in lieu of H. R. 26403) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the legal representatives of Horace B.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 26403) for the relief of the legal representatives of Horace B. Gardner, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). Is there objection to the present consideration?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

ROBERT MICHAELS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 511, in lieu of H. R. 5661) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Robert Michaels.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 5661) for the relief of Robert Michaels, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

SARAH E. TERRILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 512, in lieu of H. R. 17072) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Sarah E. Terrill.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 17072) for the relief of Sarah E. Terrill, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM TAYLOR AND JAMES TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 513, in lieu of H. R. 26312) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the legal representatives of William and James Taylor, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN. I object.

NATHANIEL HUNTLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24995) for the relief of Nathaniel Huntley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws the record of the muster of Nathaniel Huntley into the military service of the United States as a member of Company E, Fifth Regiment Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, shall be held to be void and without effect, said Huntley never in fact having been mustered into the service as a member of that organization and never having rendered any service with it, but served as a member of Company A, One hundred and fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, and was honorably discharged from that organization.

Mr. MANN. I object. Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Illi-nois to withhold his objection a moment, until I can make a statement.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to reserve the right to object; but I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the evidence in this case shows that this man deserted twice, tried to shoot his commanding officer once, and it seems to me that is a hard record to get over.

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, there is no such record as that here. This man is charged with having been in a regiment that he never was connected with, but served honorably through the war and received an honorable discharge. It is true that he got into some trouble down at the depot in Washington and a court of inquiry was organized and he was acquitted and returned to duty, and no fault whatever was found with him.

Mr. MANN. He admitted that he deserted at home, that he deserted in Washington, and that he tried to shoot his commanding officer once.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman is mistaken in that state-

Mr. MANN. All I know about it is what the report says. I say to the gentleman frankly I am not acquainted with this man at all.

Mr. JENKINS. He was tried by a court and acquitted and returned to duty. The only difficulty in his case is that he is charged with having served in a regiment that he never was connected with, and I want to get his military record corrected by striking that out. He served honorably in a New York regiment and received an honorable discharge.

Mr. MANN. The evidence shows that this man joined the regiment but never was mustered in, and while waiting to be mustered in he assaulted the lieutenant of the organization and then deserted and ran away.

Mr. JENKINS. He did not desert, because he never was mustered in.

Mr. MANN. If he did not desert he could get a pension. He appears on the rolls as a deserter, and that is what the gentleman from Wisconsin wants to overcome.

Mr. JENKINS. He is not reported as a deserter anywhere. This record says that he never was carried as a deserter anywhere. I may say to the gentlemen of the House that the War Department undoubtedly got into this error because in the early days of the war there seems to have been more men in a company than was necessary.

He undoubtedly went there to join a command, the Michigan regiment, but they did not want him, and he did get into some trouble with an officer, but he was never mustered in and never associated with it. He went to New York and served honorably all through the war. He got his pension, and later the department discovered the fact that he was connected with this Michigan cavalry regiment and then discontinued his pension, but not upon the ground that he was a deserter, because the records show that he never was carried as a deserter anywhere on any record; never discharged from the Michigan cavalry regiment.

Mr. MANN. Why did they stop his pension?

Mr. JENKINS. I can not answer that. We just simply want his record corrected, so that it will not be charged against him that he was a member of a regiment he was never associated with.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. The records would apparently show this man was mustered into the service. says he thought he was not mustered into the service and deserted because he had assaulted the lieutenant commanding him, and that is the reason they dropped him from the pension

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman is mistaken. Here is the letter from the War Department:

His name is not borne on the subsequent rolls of the company, and no further or other record of him whatever as of that organization has been found.

He never served with them or had any connection with them, and yet at the same time the records show that he was connected with that company, but in fact he never was.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says one minute the record shows that he was not connected with it and the next that he

Mr. JENKINS. Here is a feeble old man, hardly able to get around, a man who has been drawing his pension for years, and lately they have discovered this condition and have discontinued his pension. He is powerless, living on the county, and he simply asks this be corrected to show that he was never connected with the regiment and never mustered in. I trust the gentleman will not object on a matter of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe I will not object, although I think I am to be criticised for not doing so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS, UNITED STATES SIGNAL CORPS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2950) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Signal Corps.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the expenses of operating and keeping in repair the northwestern section of the United States military telegraph lines (from Bismarck to Fort Ellis and connections), constructed under act of Congress approved June 20, 1878, which, between the 20th day of June, 1878, and the 30th day of June, 1883, may have been paid out of moneys received from dispatches sent over said section, be, and the same are hereby, authorized and allowed; and the several officers making such payments are entitled to and shall receive proper credit therefor upon examination of their respective accounts: Provided, That said accounts conform in all other respects to the rules of the War and Treasury departments governing the disbursements of public moneys.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear some explanation of the bill. I object until I can hear an explanation of the merits of the measure.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, in the introduction of this bill (H. R. 2950) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Signal Corps, I had in view the case of George S. Grimes, U. S. Army, retired. A brave soldier, with a splendid record of forty-five years in the service of his country, deserving every consideration. He enlisted on August 16, 1862, in the One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Infantry, rising on his merits through all the grades, until August 12, 1907, when, on account of serious illness, he was, at his own request, retired as a brigadier-general. While serving in Indian Territory, Texas, Dakota, and Montana from 1876 to 1883, in accordance with custom, he collected and paid out all told $30,549.49 for operating and maintaining the lines, which was approved by his superior officers. A law was enacted June 20, 1878, requiring these moneys so collected to be paid into the United States Treasury. Without knowing of this law, never having been notified of the change, General Grimes continued the practice of paying out these sums as heretofore. While there is not a cent due the Government, and so admitted by the officials, General Grimes's account stands charged with $30,549.49.

The letter from General Allen, who is in charge of the Signal Service of the Army, will explain something in reference to this matter. The letter is in the report, and it is as follows:

matter. The letter is in the report, and it is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,

Washington, December 15, 1908.

SIR: I take the liberty of inviting your attention to H. R. bill 2950, introduced by Mr. GOULDEN, of New York, on December 2, 1907, and to House of Representatives Document No. 660, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, which makes report on an identical bill, and which fully explains the measure.

Recently, at the informal instance of the Treasury Department, I wrote General Grimes asking that he give this matter his attention. I received in reply a letter from his wife stating that General Grimes is very ill, suffering from nervous prostration, and totally incapable of attending to any business.

This is a matter which, as you know, has been hanging a long time, and the Treasury and War departments are, of course, anxious that it should be cleared up. From the report referred to, it seems that General Grimes was practically blameless in the matter. If a favorable report is made by the committee, it may be possible that the case could be completed at the present session of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

IAMES ALLEN,
Brigadier-General Chief Signal Offices of the constitution of the constitution of the constitution of the committee.

Brigadier-General, Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

Hon. James M. Miller, M. C., House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I will now read in explanation the letter of General Grimes himself, of date January 22, 1906. Mr. MACON. What is the amount?

Mr. GOULDEN. Thirty thousand five hundred and forty-nine dollars and forty-nine cents, but there is no claim made against the Government. It is simply to clear up the record. He is very desirous to have it done, because of the fact that he wanted it and because it is so excellent. Quoting from the letter of January 22, 1906, to the War Department, I read:

My responsibility for the expenditure of the funds in question I consider was discharged—the integrity of the accounts not being in question—when I rendered, in the form and manner prescribed by the Signal Department, the monthly accounts current, as they became due, and when they were approved by that department.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me to interrogate him, I think we can get along very much faster than by having him read the letter.

Mr. GOULDEN. Very well. Mr. MACON. I want to know what the trouble is. Is the man a delinquent?

Mr. GOULDEN. No.

Mr. MACON. Then why do you want to clear up his record? Mr. MACON. Then why do you want to clear up his record? Mr. GOULDEN. We want to clear it up, and I was reading from his own letter explanatory about it. He expended the money while he was in charge of the Signal Service.

Mr. MACON. He expended over $30,000?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes. He was not at that time authorized to expend this money, but it was approved by the department.

It was found afterwards that he acted without authority, but there is no question of any money due the Government what-

Mr. MACON. Is the Government holding him responsible for this amount?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; it is charged to his account.
Mr. MILLER. Yes; it is. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that these amounts are charged up against the officers. General Grimes is one of them. There are a number of them. These amounts are charged up against them in the department, and they are asking now the adjustment of these accounts, for the reason that the moneys they collected for private telegrams were used for the maintenance of the telegraph lines, as had been done for years; but the law was changed, and after the change of the law they had no right to use the money they collected for private telegrams in the repair of the telegraph lines.

But, under the command of his superior officer, he continued to use the money collected in this way, and when the matter was presented to the department the department refused to allow him credit for it, and it exists now as a charge against these officers, and we are asking now that this account simply may be adjusted.

Mr. MACON. How long has it been standing against him? Mr. MILLER. For years, and the department has appeale For years, and the department has appealed to Congress to make this ruling that they may be relieved. It is not a question of paying any money; nobody is out anything.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is merely a claim which is to get rid of a technical objection urged by the department against certain men, which is a perfectly proper claim, and so recognized by everybody.

Mr. MACON. The hardest hill I have to climb in connection with this case is that it seems to be so innocent, so little objection to its passage, that I can not understand why Congress has heretofore allowed such a little thing to stand in the way of the passage of a bill that would give to this claimant the relief that gentlemen say he is so eminently entitled to.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas in explanation of that, that prior to June, 1878, moneys received from private telegrams sent over United States military telegraph lines were used for the maintenance and repair of the lines, but at that time the law was changed.

Mr. MACON. But you say this has been before Congress for several years.

Mr. MILLER. At that time the law was changed and they could no longer pay out money that way, but this officer never received any notice of the passage of that law, and under the command of his superior officer he continued to pay out money collected in that way for the repair of lines. Had he not done that and turned this money into the Treasury Department, why the Government would have had to pay

Mr. CLAYTON. And the Government got the benefit of this expenditure

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not quite fully stated the merits of the case, if the gentleman will pardon me. He said for the repair of the lines

Mr. MILLER. Maintenance and repair.

Mr. MANN. And for the operation, if the gentleman will pardon me. It is the custom now to turn in fees coming from government telegraph lines into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. It was formerly the custom to use the receipts for the payment of operating expenses, and that was being done upon these telegraph lines, and thereupon Congress passed a law requiring, properly, that all receipts for the Government should be turned into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. This officer was in charge of certain telegraph lines, and operating them with receipts coming in from private persons for private telegraph services. He continued to do that, although Congress had passed a law. Of course, theoretically it was his business to know-

Mr. MACON. I was going to ask in that connection, what advantage have employees or officers of the Government over private persons along that line; ought they not to be required to have knowledge of the law just as private citizens are required

Mr. MANN. Theoretically he was supposed to know what the act of Congress was, but practically he did not know, and his superior directed him to continue paying these, so that even the superior here did not understand this act of Congress applied to this service. Now, it is admitted this money which is charged against the man was used by him in operating the government telegraph lines for the benefit of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

J. C. HAGGARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15755) for the relief of J. C. Haggard, of White County, Tenn. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to J. C. Haggard, of White County, Tenn., the sum of $73.59, for tax paid on 66.9 gallons of whisky, the warehouse having previously been unlawfully broken into and said 66.9 gallons of whisky stolen, without fault or negligence on said Haggard's part.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19579) for the relief of J. W. Patterson.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

S. R. GREEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 212) to reimburse S. R. Green, postmaster of Oregon City, Oreg., for moneys lost by burglary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to repay to S. R. Green, postmaster at Oregon City, Oreg., the sum of $206.40, to reimburse him for key-deposit funds lost by burgiary on December 17, 1896.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

CAPT. GEORGE VAN ORDEN, U. S. MARINE CORPS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 568) for the relief of Capt. George Van Orden, U. S. Marine Corps.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $291.37 be, and it is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and placed to the credit of Capt. (formerly First Lieut.) George Van Orden, U. S. Marine Corps, in the final settlement of his accounts as acting commissary of subsistence, United States Army, island of Guam, by the Auditor for the War Department, in lieu of government funds to the same amount which were stolen and embezzled by a clerk in the office of the commissary of subsistence, island of Guam, in the year 1901, on account of the theft of which sum the accounts of the said Capt. (formerly First Lieut.) George Van Orden, U. S. Marine Corps, are now suspended in the office of the Auditor for the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF WILLIAM AND JAMES TAYLOR, DECEASED.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to House resolution 513.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to return to House resolution 513, Calendar No. 764. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the bill (H. R. 26312) for the relief of the legal representatives of William and James Taylor, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

JOHN M. M'DOWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 685) to provide for the payment of John M. McDowell for services rendered in preparing a new set of indices of all records of Council City recording district of the second judicial district of Alaska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John M. McDowell, of Council City, Alaska, a sum not to exceed $3,000, being for services rendered in preparing a new set of indices of all the records of Council City recording district of the second judicial district of Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. I will withhold my objection if the gentleman cares to explain the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill. It has passed the Senate, and I can probably explain it better by reading the letter of the Attorney-General than by any statement that I might make. The letter, in brief, is this:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, January 25, 1907.

Washington, January 25, 1907.

My Dear Senator: I desire to submit for your consideration the following statement: It appears that about the spring of 1904 Judge Alfred S. Moore, of the second judicial district of Alaska, authorized Mr. J. M. McDowell, United States commissioner for the Council City recording district in Alaska, to prepare a new set of indices of all the records of said Council City recording district. It seems that owing to the inartificial character of the early records and the indices relating thereto the greatest inconveniences resulted to both mine and real-estate owners in the Council City district. It often became necessary, in looking up title to one single piece of property, to consult between 20 and 30 indices. Most of the early records were apparently kept in cheap notebooks and ledgers, and some of the indices were, in 1902, beginning to fall to pieces. Mr. McDowell seems to have spent a great deal of time in preparing these new records and indices, in accordance with the instructions of Judge Moore, and also went to an expense of about $500 in employing assistance for this work.

There is no fund available under existing legislation to pay Mr. McDowell's claim of $3,000. In my judgment, the claim is fair and provision should be made to meet it.

I also transmit herewith certain affidavits and other papers on which Mr. McDowell's claim is based.

Very truly, yours,

Charles J. Bonaparte. CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

Hon. Clarence D. Clark, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, United States Senate.

Mr. MACON. Now, I will ask the gentleman if the judge did not have authority to direct this gentleman to do his work.

Mr. MILLER. He seems to have had no authority under the law. And I may say to the gentleman from Arkansas that he had the right to direct him to do the work, but he had no authority to do so.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think it would be a wise policy for the Government to meet all the obligations that might be imposed against it by persons who were without authority to do so?

Mr. MILLER. No; I do not think so at all. But in view of the fact that this man was ordered by the court or appointed by the court

Mr. MACON. But the court had no authority, and therefore it had no more right to order this party to do the work than the gentleman from Kansas had.

Mr. MILLER. Possibly not, but this man that did the work supposed the court had full authority to do it.

Mr. MACON. Must the Government suffer because of the mistakes, defaults, or misapprehensions or misdirections of Mr. MILLER. In place of the Government being compelled to suffer in this case, the Government has received the benefit of the work done by this man, and is enjoying that benefit now by the use of these indices prepared by him.

Mr. MACON. You are sure the work ought to have been

Mr. MILLER. Certainly the work ought to have been done. They admit that, and the Government is now using them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

J. M. BLOOM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1204) for the relief of J. M. Bloom.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the account of J. M. Bloom, late postmaster at Clearfield, State of Pennsylvania, to be credited with the sum of $118.18, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, being on account of loss of $123 in postal funds by robbery of said post-office on the 10th day of February, 1897, and $66.12 for expenses incurred in the effort to apprehend the burglars, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said late postmaster; and the sum of $118.18 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said claim.

Mr. MANN Reserving the right to object. I would simply

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would simply like to say this: I do not propose to detain the committee at this time, when there are many bills on the calendar, about a little claim like this that ought to be acted on. But the amounts in the bill are wrong. The man was credited with $118 by the Post-Office Department, and the intention was to credit him with the balance. Instead of doing that, here we credit him with the amount he has already been credited with.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, if that is true, I trust the gentleman from Illinois will move an amendment, because I think this ought to be amended if that statement is correct. This is a Senate bill.

That statement is correct. The beneficiary will Mr. MANN. receive by this bill a little less than he is entitled to, and probably it is his mistake.

Mr. MILLER. No objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ELLA M. COLLINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1750) to reimburse Ella M. Collins, late postmaster at Goldfield, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance and supplies.

Nev., for money expended for cherical assistance and supplies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to say to the gentleman that this was one of those exceptional cases where there was an unusual increase in the population. Two Postmasters-General, Mr. Cortelyou and Mr Meyer, have both indorsed the payment of this obein. claim.

Mr. MACON. But the idea is this: I want to find out from the gentleman if he thinks it would be a wise policy for the Government to meet all the obligations that might be imposed upon it by the postmasters throughout the country employing such assistance as they might think they needed without authority of law? Mr. MILLER. Mr. MILLER. I will say frankly to the gentleman that I am inclined to think that ought to be the policy of the Government. I think the policy of the Government ought to be to pay to every postmaster who is required, when there is a change of population from 2,000 to 10,000 within the comparative short period of forty-eight to seventy-two hours, to go out and hire additional assistance to help to do the government work. I

Mr. MACON. Not in such cases. Has not the Post-Office Department the right to pay postmasters throughout the country additional compensation for clerk hire out of an emergency fund?

Mr. MILLER. I think not, and they have never been paid. Mr. MACON. We appropriate an emergency fund for that very purpose every time we pass the post-office appropriation

Mr. MILLER. Well, this matter has been passed upon by the Post-Office Department, and two Postmasters-General say that this allowance ought to be made.

Mr. MACON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

GARRETT R. BRADLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1752) to reimburse Garrett R. Bradley, late postmaster at Tonopah, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Garrett R. Bradley, late postmaster at Tonopah, Nev., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $442.14, to reimburse him for money expended for necessary clerical assistance.

Mr. MACON. This is the same kind of a bill, Mr. Speaker; I will have to object.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for just a moment?

Mr. MACON. Yes, sir; I will reserve the objection.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I feel very much alike upon this proposition. There are two of these bills here. I went in and looked up the matter. These are two mining towns in Nevada where there was a great influx of population all at once. Under the postal laws it is not possible to increase the salary or the compensation or the clerical service of an office that jumps at once from a moderate fourth-class post-office to a higher grade of office.

In other words, it has to be determined by a certain period of time. There was no possibility for the Government to provide for the compensation for these two offices. On the other hand, it was either the duty of the postmasters there to deliver the mail properly or else to resign. If they had resigned they could secure nobody else to do the work. In addition to that—

Mr. MACON. Right there; does not the gentleman think that the Government would have taken a hand and furnished clerical exceptions of the secure of the content of the ical assistance sufficient to have conducted the affairs of that office rather than have it closed?

Mr. MANN. Permit me to say to the gentleman the Government could not conduct the affairs of the office without somebody there. Now, everybody in these two places was mining crazy, just the same as in other mining countries, and the people were not going there for the purpose of doing clerical work.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Government would not have permitted the postmaster to resign under those conditions. Mr. MANN. Probably not; and the result would be-

Mr. CLAYTON. And his bond would be liable.
Mr. MANN. The result would probably be as I saw it at Montauk Point during the Spanish war, when there were thousands of soldiers there in hospitals, and no way of getting their mail; and I saw tons and tons and tons of mail piled up in a tent, and no one knew to whom it was to go, and no one attempted to distribute it, or deliver it, or to handle it in any way.

It was a crying shame to the Government. If either the gentleman or myself were at Tonopah, or had a son or relative at Tonopah, we would want to have the mail properly handled, and it could not be handled without help. I think on the pure merits the gentleman ought to withdraw his objection to the former bill, and to let this go through.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I have known the department to increase the clerks in different post-offices when the work got so heavy that the force then employed could not attend to it: and I can not understand why it ever becomes necessary for postmasters to take it upon themselves to employ clerks without the authority of the Government, unless it is that they want to take the work off their own shoulders and employ some one to do it, and rely upon the Government to reimburse them for having expended the money for their own pleasure and comfort.

Mr. MANN. The Post-Office Department could not have authorized this expenditure of money, because the law very properly prohibits a clerk-hire allowance to exceed $1,000 in the class of offices to which this office belonged when the great influx of population went into the place. Now, before the class of the office could be changed under the law, which requires six months' time, the population was so great there that the clerical hire permitted to be given by the department could not do the work. The department states that very fact. I asked the department about these two cases, and they informed me that the only thing for a responsible government official, who was worth a whoop in a certain unpleasant place, was to take the responsibility of doing that which the department could not authorize, trusting to the generosity and good sense of Congress to reimburse him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. There is objection. This can be met just as other cases have to be met that are on the Private Calendar.

They can be taken up and passed in their order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

FARMERS AND MERCHANTS' BANK OF MANDAN, N. DAK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3723) for the relief of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Mandan, N. Dak.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Mandan, N. Dak., the sum of $57, being the amount of money which was contained in registered letter No. 65130, addressed to said bank by the United States Treasurer at Washington, D. C., February 28, 1905, and destroyed in the burning of a postal car near Hyndman, Pa., March 1, 1905.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

IMPORTATIONS OF ABSINTHE AND KIRSCHWASSER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3808) to refund certain excess duties paid upon importations of absinthe and kirschwasser from Switzerland between June

GEORGE Q. ALLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4435) for the relief of George Q. Allen.

The bill was read.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

MAJ. G. S. BINGHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6891) for the relief of Maj. G. S. Bingham.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Maj. G. S. Bingham a sun equal to the amount of pay withheld from said officer because of his acceptance of the single-screw quartermaster steamer General Joseph E. Johnston, and no pay shall be hereafter withheld from said officer on that account.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTINA ROCKWELL.

The next business was the bill (S. 7390) for the relief of Christina Rockwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Christina Rockwell, surviving widow of O. P. Rockwell, the sum of $1,073.13, said sum being due the said
O. P. Rockwell, and never paid, as a mail contractor for star mail service in Utah during the contract term July 1, 1862, to June 30, 1866.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an explanation of that. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr.

Howell] to explain the matter.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, the basis of this claim is found in a letter of the Auditor of the Post-Office Department. It seems that Mr. Rockwell was mail contractor for several routes in Utah. For some reason he failed to send in proper youchers, and his accounts were never settled. There remains to his credit on the books of the auditor of the department the sum of $1,073.13. He is now dead, and the bill is to enable the Post-Office Department to pay this sum to his widow.

Mr. MACON. Do the accounts in the Post-Office Department show that he is entitled to this amount?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. The auditor certifies to the amount carried in the bill as standing to his credit.

Mr. MACON. And the only reason they can not pay it is because they have not the proper vouchers?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT TO RELIGIOUS ORDERS OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH, PHILIP-PINE ISLANDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 26228) to provide for payment of the claims of the Augustinians, the Dominicans, the Recoletos, and the Franciscans, religious orders of the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HACKNEY. I object.

PENSION TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF THE REGULAR ARMY AND NAVY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 27249) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MACON. I would like to make an inquiry as to how The SPEAKER. Everything on the Private Calendar is in order, and that is where the pension bills go.

Mr. SIMS. If this is a pension bill, I object. We have two days in the month for pension bills, and it can be considered on one of those days.

JAMES W. SEARS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21029) for the relief of James W. Sears.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the Dill, as Iollows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to James W. Sears (now residing at Albion, in the State of Michigan) the sum of $3,000, being in full for the payment of the canal boat P. G. Dennison, owned by said Sears, but which was destroyed by fire at the port of New York in the year 1863, the said boat at that time being loaded with government stores, having been impressed and taken by the officers of the United States for the use of the Government. The sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated to pay the said James W. Sears for the loss of his property out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES EASSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16854) for the relief of James Easson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Cierk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to James Easson, of Racine, Racine County, Wis., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $300 being the sum unlawfully collected from him by the board of enrollment, namely, $300, to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the army, he not being a citizen of the United States at the time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. BIRD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 518, in lieu of H. R. 19873) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of the legal representatives of William P. The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 19873) for the relief of the legal representatives of William P. Bird, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 521, in lieu of H. R. 21420) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of John B. De Bord.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 21420) for the relief of John B. De Bord, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

PHILADELPHIA COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6312) for the relief of the Philadelphia Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Philadelphia Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding, the sum of $2,741.60, the amount of taxes improperly collected by the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent that calendar numbers 1152 and 1153, being bills (S. 2911) for the relief of the Columbus Gas and Fuel Company and (S. 3748) for the relief of the Logan Natural Gas and Fuel Company, of Columbus, Ohio, may be taken upon and considered at this time. These are exactly the same kind of bills. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS], who objected, has withdrawn his objection, and I will make the same request in any other case that may be presented.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I object to going back at this me. We will have an opportunity of reaching them in the regular way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

G. W. HOWLAND.

The next business was the resolution (H. Res. 522) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of G. W. Howland.

The resolution was read by the Clerk.

The resolution was read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that resolution be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

W. P. DUKES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7157) for the relief of W. P. Dukes, postmaster at Rowesville, S. C.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. P. Dukes, the sum of $74.36, the amount stolen from him while postmaster at Rowesville, Orangeburg County, S. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply want to make this statement. The report says that the Post-Office Department refuses to allow this man's claim simply on the ground that he did not keep the stamps in a safe. I do not wish that report to go into the files of Congress unchallenged, because that is an error on the part of the gentleman who wrote the report. The Post-Office Department makes no such rule as that at all.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I wrote the report, and I want to state that the Post-Office Department did say that in a letter, and I took it out of the letter myself.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the claim being passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT GRAHAM

The next business was the resolution (H. Res. 525) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Robert Graham.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 27336) for the relief of Robert Graham, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

ANGELINE C. BURGERT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 25064) for the relief of Angeline C. Burgert.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Angeline C. Burgert the sum of $157.72, the amount of her distributive share of the net proceeds of the sale of the Painesville and Youngstown Railroad, applicable to bond No. 209, issued by the Painesville and Youngstown Railroad Company and owned by her, out of the sum of $473.22 deposited in the United States Treasury on December 1, 1898, by Irving Belford, clerk of the United States circuit court, to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States circuit court, to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States with the National Bank of Commerce of Cleveland, Ohio, on account of unclaimed funds, as per certificate of deposit No. 201, which said deposit was covered into the United States Treasury, by a miscellaneous receipt, by warrant No. 2274, second quarter of the Year 1899.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and JOHN W. SAVILLE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8276) placing John W. Saville, passed assistant engineer, United States Navy, on the retired list with an advanced rank.

The Clerk read the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Mr. HOLLIDAY. I reserve the right to object. That is the same kind of bill that objection was made to a little while ago. Mr. DAWSON. Does the gentleman from Indiana intend to object to the bill?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes.

Mr. DAWSON. Regardless of any explanation that is to be

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I will listen to the explanation Mr. DAWSON. I do not want to attempt to convince the gentleman against his will. The purpose of this bill is simply to undo what was done by special act in the case of this man in the year 1884. By reason of the passage of that special act in 1884, which advanced him one grade, he is deprived under the general law of an advancement which this bill seeks to give him, and if the bill which was passed in 1884 had not been passed in his case, then this special act would not be necessary.

Mr. MANN. This beneficiary received a special act of Congress in 1884, and, as I understand it, enjoyed the benefits of that special act from 1884 to 1906. He had that benefit?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes. Mr. MANN. Now he Now he says that that special act is no benefit to him since 1906. Does the gentleman not think that he has had benefit long enough when he had the benefit of a special act for twenty-two years, without seeking to take up the time of the House to pass two bills for one man, when most people can not get time enough granted to pass one bill?

Mr. DAWSON. This gentleman received no benefit to which he was not entitled. As a matter of fact, this man was a chief engineer, and when the time came for him to be examined with a view to his advancement one grade he was stationed on the Asiatic Station in China. By reason of his situation there and the exigency of the service the department was unable to allow him to take his examination when he had a right to be examined, and so by reason of this delinquency this officer was denied that right through no fault of his own. The report sets forth the facts succinctly, as follows:

forth the facts succinctly, as follows:

On January 21, 1871, Passed Assistant Engineer Sayille was transferred to the retired list as a second assistant engineer for physical disability, which was due to an incident of the service, after having had creditable civil-war service.

By an act of Congress passed in 1884 he was commissioned as passed assistant engineer on the retired list from June 19, 1884. He was entitled to promotion to the grade of passed assistant engineer prior to the date of his retirement, but owing to the fact that he was then serving in China, he could not be examined for promotion until some time subsequently, when he was found physically disabled in the line of duty and was retired without promotion. The act of 1884 gave to Mr. Saville only what he was entitled to had he been examined when his vacancy became due and had he not been found physically disqualified. This special act of 1884, however, excluded Mr. Saville from participating in the benefits conferred on officers with creditable civil-war service under the act of June 29, 1906, by reason of a proviso in that act as follows:

"That this act shall not apply to any officer who received an advance of grade at or since the date of his retirement."

If this bill becomes a law, Mr. Saville will receive no further advancement than he would have received had he not been advanced by the special act of Congress in 1884. The bill carries no provisions for back pay.

Mr. MANN. Well, the law did not allow it.

Mr. MANN. Well, the law did not allow it.

Mr. DAWSON. The law did give the advancement to him, but the department, by reason of the exigencies of the service, did not permit him to have his examination when the law

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, in order to save the time of the House, I object.

JAMES C. M'FARLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 528) for the relief of James C. McFarland and his heirs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 27232) for the relief of James C. McFarland and heirs, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and generally known as the Tucker Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR DAMAGES, ETC., AS RECOMMENDED BY LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20165) to reimburse various persons for damages and losses as recommended by the Light-House Board.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.
Mr. CHANEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the next pension bills be passed, as there are several other claims to be taken up. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Kansas to reserve his objection in order that the matter may be explained.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, not at all; I do not withdraw my objection.

Mr. MILLER. Have you objection to the bill on its merits? Mr. MURDOCK. I think the bill ought to go over and be considered later

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the pension bills be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the pension bills on the calendar will be passed without prejudice.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I made objection to H. R. 27249, being a pension bill. I did not know at the time that other pension bills had been reached and passed, as I intended to object to all of them; so that if that has been done, I will withdraw that objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Chaner] has requested that the other pension bills on the calendar be passed without prejudice.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

MERRITT & CHAPMAN DERRICK AND WRECKING COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24131) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust the claim of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick and Wrecking Company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is the custom of the Committee on Claims to refer claims to departmental officers with power to pay the same. I do not remember any other bill having been before Congress in years where we provided that the bill shall be sent to the head of the department, with authority, practically, to pay it.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr.

HOWELL]

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, there is no question as to the collision occurring through the fault of the Government. The steamer that was injured was at anchor and the government steamship ran into it. The only question before the committee was as to the amount of damage. There has been a board of survey, which reported upon the character of the damage, but not as to the amount of the damage. In this bill we authorize the Secretary of War to pass upon that survey and fix the amount of damage within the limit of $1,800. The wrecking company have put their damages at $1,800, but the committee did not feel justified in accepting that amount, but deemed it safer to leave to the Secretary of War the determination as to the amount of damage actually inflicted upon the injured vessel.

Mr. MANN. I can see a reason for taking care of the claim, and undoubtedly that ought to be disposed of, but does the gentleman think that is a good precedent to establish, where a claim is presented before the Congress that Congress shall refer it to the Secretary of War, or to the Secretary of Agriculture, or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or some other official of the Government, with authority to audit the claim?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I think it is a common practice to give wide discretion to the heads of departments. They have the expenditure in some instances of millions of dollars, to be expended at their discretion, and we did not feel it was a dangerous precedent to allow the Secretary of War, in a case where the Government was clearly at fault for damages, to fix the amount of such damage, especially when we limited his discretion to the amount that is claimed by the persons who were injured.

Mr. MANN. Well, you have not made any limit here, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. It is not to exceed $1,800.

Mr. MANN. We appropriate not to exceed $1,800, but you authorize the Secretary to audit $25,000, and then it comes regularly in an appropriation bill. Now, it seems to me a very dangerous precedent to refer claims, not to the Court of Claims, not to the Committee on Claims, but to any officer you happen to select in a given department of the Government.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman propose an amendment in few words making such a limitation as he thinks ought to be there?

Mr. MANN. My own suggestion would be to have him report back to Congress

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. The Secretary of War has already reported in favor of the claim, recommending that it be allowed. It is a just obligation against the Government. master-General also recommends the appropriation of eighteen hundred dollars as a reasonable amount for the damage inflicted. But we felt it ought to be referred to the Secretary of War for a fuller investigation of the damages, as there is some conflict in the papers as to what the damages actually are.

Mr. MANN. I will not object to the consideration of this bill, but I will object so far as its making a precedent is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask the gentleman from Utah a question: Is the gentleman on the Committee on Claims?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I am. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand that the claim under consideration is for damages resulting from a collision?
Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And you propose to leave it entirely to the discretion of a department official to adjust it at an amount not to exceed $1,800? The other day I had before your committee a claim for a man who fell through a rotten plank, broke five ribs, broke one of his legs in three places, broke his fingers, and was unconscious for twelve days. Your committee refused to take it up although the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, in his brief, said that the man ought to be paid and ought to have $5,000. I object.

BANK OF FREEBURG, MO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 27221) for the relief of the Bank of Freeburg, of Freeburg, Mo. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Bank of Freeburg, of Freeburg, Mo., the sum of $200, being the amount of money which was contained in registered letter, No. 86, addressed to Joseph Wolff, at Argyle, Mo., and destroyed in the burning of the post-office at Argyle, Mo., December 11, 1907.

Also the following committee amendment:

In line 5 strike out the words "two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the hill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 655) for the relief of Richard A. Proctor.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Richard A. Proctor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, for use of lands near Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., as part of the target range during the seasons of 1906 and 1907.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CADMUS E. CRABILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 7325) for the relief of Cadmus E. Crabill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Cadmus E. Crabill, postmaster at South Bend, Ind., with the sum of $18,653.50, being the amount of postage stamps and stamped paper belonging to the Post-Office Department of the United States stolen from said Cadmus E. Crabill by robbers on the 15th day of November, 1908, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said postmaster.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DAVID H. DICKINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 27342) to amend the military record of David H. Dickinson,

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That David H. Dickinson, late a private of Company G, Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from said company and regiment on August 9, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act: And provided further, That from any pension he may hereafter show himself entitled to there shall be no deduction or rebate on account of former alleged erroneous payments of pension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from some member of the committee to explain this bill.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, the report is very volumi-The record shows that this man was a soldier in the civil war, and a splendid one, with an excellent military record. He served one term of enlistment and got along very nicely. In the second term of enlistment the officer in command seemed to be something of a martinet, and upon one occasion, for a trifling infraction of the rules, the officer commanding his regiment directed one of his comrades to be tied up by his thumbs. He was tied in a position where he suffered great agony, and kept there a good while, for a mere trifling infraction of military discipline. The particular soldier mentioned in this bill, accompanied by 15 or 16 other fellows, cut him down, and they were charged with insubordination, convicted, and sent to prison; served a short time in prison and were released on the expiration of their sentence.

Mr. Speaker, I have gone through that record carefully, and I am satisfied there is not a man in this House who would not have done the same thing under the same circumstances. think we ought to set the seal of approval on this soldier.

Mr. NORRIS. Is this one of the soldiers that cut the other soldier down? Mr. HOLLIDAY. This is one of the soldiers to other soldier down. That is all he is charged with. Thig is one of the soldiers that cut the

Mr. NORRIS. Is he the only soldier involved in this bill?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. The only soldier. I think the rest are all Mr. NORRIS. I have heard it said that this bill was very similar to the one that was vetoed by the President recently. Mr. HOLLIDAY. It does not bear the slightest resemblance to the one that was vetoed.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4312) for the relief of William E. Moses.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, ctc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized to reconvey, by proper deed of conveyance, all title which the said William E. Moses had vested in the United States Government to the following-described lands: S. ½ S. ½ SW. ½ SC. 5, T. 7 S., R. 74 W., Colorado, 30 acres; SW. ½ SB. ½ SI. ½ SE. ½ SW. ½

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object to that bill. I would like to know why it is we are asked by the Committee on Public Lands to give away title to the property described here covering three or four pages?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, as I reported that bill, I will briefly explain it.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will explain it more than it is in the report.

Mr. FRENCH. Under the act of June 4, 1897, certain lands that had been patented and which were embraced within forest reserves could be surrendered, and those who surrendered the lands would receive the right to make lieu selection.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Moses surrendered this land and issued a deed in favor of the United States and had it recorded. After that was done the Government found itself in this position: It found some irregularities in the abstract, and before they could be corrected, or assuming that they could not be at all corrected, the Government declined to issue the right of lieu selection before the law was modified. Now the Government finds itself in the position that it can neither return the land nor issue the right to select lieu lands.

Mr. MANN. Who recorded the deed?

Mr. FRENCH. It is recorded in the county in which the land is situated.

Mr. MANN. Who filed the deed for record?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Moses, who wanted to surrender the land. Now, the law itself-

Mr. MANN. Is that the custom, for the grantor to file the deed?

Mr. FRENCH. He filed the deed at the time of making application to surrender the land and to receive the right to make lien selections.

Mr. MANN. Apparently the Government had never examined the title, because the bill requires the man to furnish an abstract of the title to the land. If they had already examined the title and had an abstract, why should the law propose to require him to furnish another abstract?

Mr. FRENCH. Well, on that point I do not know. The Secretary himself is in favor of this bill. He finds himself in the position of being neither able to accept the land nor to issue the lieu selection right therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time. and passed.

JOHN V. VICKERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4313) for the relief of John V. Vickers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized to reconvey, by proper deed of conveyance, all title which the said John V. Vickers has vested in the United States Government to the following-described land, to wit: SW. ½ NE. ½ and SE. ½ NW. ½ and the W. ½ SE. ½, sec. 26, T. 10 S., R. 68 W. of the sixth principal meridian, Colorado, embracing 160 acres: Provided, That the said John V. Vickers makes satisfactory proof of such conveyance to the United States of said land by the submission of an abstract of title together with the deed of conveyance to the United States of the General Land Office.

The SEFAKER Let there exhibitories? Lafter a person of the conveyance to the United States of the General Land Office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCISCO KREBS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 27252) for the relief of Francisco Krebs and his heirs and

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Francisco Krebs, his heirs and assigns, be, and he is hereby, confirmed in his title to that part of Round Island, in the State of Mississippi, situated in secs. 33 and 34, T. 8 S., R. 6 W., east of Pearl River, containing approximately 60.85 acres, and being a part of the land granted by the Spanish Governor Grimarest to Francisco Krebs, on December 13, 1783, and recorded in translated records, book No. 2, page 51, in the probate court at Mobile, Ala., the residue of said Island, to wit: All of fractional secs. 3 and 4, T. 9 S., R. 6 W., east of Pearl River, and containing, respectively, about 16.50 and 33.44 acres, set forth and reserved by executive order of President McKinley, dated September 3, 1900, being expressly hereby excepted from the terms of this act, the same being reserved by the United States for light-house purposes: Provided, That nothing in this act of confirmation shall affect the claim or claims of any other person or persons to the said land hereby confirmed to said Francisco Krebs, his heirs and assigns, or any part thereof derived from the United States or any source whatever.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent the authorities of the United States from cutting and removing trees or other growth on any part of said island which may in any wise obscure the light from the light-house situate on said island or obstruct the view thereof, and no structure of any character whatever shall ever be erected or permitted on any part of said island at such place or in such manner as to obstruct or obscure said light, and the authorities of the United States shall at all times have the right to remove and abate any and all obstructions to the clear, full, and perfect view thereof, without incurring any liability whatever for so doing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to attract the attention of the gentleman who introduced the bill to the fact that apparently the bill proposes to confirm title to a certain piece of property in the party now claiming title, and at the same time reserves to the Government the right of control to a certain extent over it. The two propositions are entirely inconsistent.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, my attention had been brought to that defect, and I have drafted an amendment, making the acceptance an acceptance of all conditions that are imposed on the title, and making it run with the land.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section:
"SEC. 3. The application for a patent hereunder and acceptance of same shall be held to be an acceptance by the claimant of all the terms and conditions of this act, which shall run with the land."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM BOLDENWECK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 890) for the relief of William Boldenweck, assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in settling the accounts of William Boldenweck, assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago, to pass to the credit of said Boldenweck the sum of $173,000, being the sum which was stolen from the subtreasury at Chicago during the year 1907.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the reasons stated in the minority views on this case, I object.

Mr. BOUTELL. I think perhaps the gentleman will with-draw his objection. I hope he will reserve the objection, with a possibility of ultimately withdrawing it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will reserve it.

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not know that anything I can state will add to what is so well stated in the report of the majority; but this is a Senate bill, recommended by the Treasury Department, and favorably reported by the proper committee of this House. Under these circumstances I very much hope that the gentleman from Missouri will let this go to a vote.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says the affirmative side of this question has been well expressed in the majority report. I believe I could not express myself better than I have in the minority report which I and others have filed in this case.

Mr. BOUTELL. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, we are getting toward the end of the session; we will not observe the 5 o'clock hour. We are within four or five bills of the end of the calendar. Why not have a vote on this on its merits?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I believe, Mr. Speaker, I shall feel constrained under the circumstances, much as I regret it, to object.

Mr. BOUTELL. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I make a point of order against that

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Was it not agreed that all of this calendar should be gone through with where the bills were not objected to? That was the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any agreement. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELL. If there was any agreement, it was while the gentleman from Illinois was not on the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was the rule itself that was passed.

Mr. MACON. The special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the Clerk's desk: Has there been an agreement in the House changing the terms of the special order during the session to-day? The Chair is informed that no such agreement has been made.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is not the gentleman's motion out of order under the rule itself?

The SPEAKER. It is not: for the reason that when the rule was agreed to that question was raised and properly settled by a statement as to the effect of the rule, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], that it was quite in the power of the House, if it saw proper to do so, on motion at any time to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

The question being taken, the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DANIEL W. ABBOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 26516) authorizing Daniel W. Abbott to make homestead entry. The bill was read, as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel W. Abbott be, and he is hereby, empowered to make entry of and acquire title to the south half of the southeast quarter and the south half of the southwest quarter of section 6 in township 10 south, range 28 east, Boise meridian, under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States, notwithstanding he may have heretofore exhausted his right to make entry under said laws, and he shall be given credit, under any entry made by him under this act, for the full period of such actual residence as he may have maintained on said land prior to the time he makes entry under this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CLAIMS UNDER BOWMAN AND TUCKER ACTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker acts, with amendments of the Senate thereto, reported from the Committee on War Claims with sundry Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. The bill has not been read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill should be read first. Mr. HASKINS. I call for the reading of the report. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill has not been read.

The SPEAKER. The bill covers many scores of pages.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me I might as well object. Undoubtedly we shall have to take that up another day. The Senate amendments represent 175 printed pages

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, unless there is objection.

Mr. MANN. Under the circumstances at present, I will object. Mr. HASKINS. All I ask is to have a short report read. We do not ask to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The amendments can not be acted upon without being read.

Mr. SIMS. I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection

for a moment

The SPEAKER. The rulings of the present occupant of the Chair and, in so far as the Chair recollects, of all former Speakers, have been that a bill or an amendment must be read at some stage before it is acted upon.

Mr. SIMS. I realize that, but I want to make a statement, as briefly as possible, after which I think there will be no objection made. Will the gentleman from Illinois withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I am willing to reserve the right to object.
Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the membership of the House that this is an omnibus war claims bill. As it passed this House, it had nothing in it but court findings. went to the Senate and has been amended and comes back with more than $2,000,000 increase. It comes back as a Senate amendment, The Senate having struck out the entire House bill and then put in the House items and Senate additions as one amendment. It is utterly impossible for it to be considered in this House, read and considered, item by item, discussed, and voted upon at this late hour. Therefore the demand for the reading of this bill of about 200 pages at this time means the death of the bill. There will be no other opportunity to consider this bill after to-day. There is no more than time now for the conferees to consider it properly and thoroughly, if sent to them at once. If it can not go to conference without reading the bill in full at this time, it is very clear that it can not be passed at this session of this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr Speaker, reserving the right to object for a moment, this bill can easily be passed by the Senate receding from its amendment without a conference. All they have got to do is to ask that the bill be returned to the Senate. When the bill passed the House, it was distinctly stated in the House that if when it came back it should be loaded up with page after page of propositions concerning which no one in the House was informed, it would meet with every proper objection.

If the Senate desires to pass the bill which was passed by the House, let them pass it in that shape. If they have claims which the Senate thinks ought to be allowed, let them pass a Senate bill and send it over here, and, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to help consider it on its merits. Here are 25 pages originally of this bill, and now there are 212.

Like every other Member of the House I am flooded with requests from people in my territory who have claims in the bill, some of which are possibly and probably meritorious, and some of which I know are not meritorious. Most of them are claims that have been persistently pushed; many of them are claims concerning which the Committee on War Claims has never had jurisdiction, and probably never had any knowledge; and when the conference committee would be agreed to naturally it would be composed of members of the Committee on War Claims, although probably one-half of these Senate claims in the Senate amendments relate solely to claims that would go to other committees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

JAMES A. PAULK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4168) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of James A. Paulk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,390 to James A. Paulk, of Bullock County, Ala., being the amount found due him by the Court of Claims on January 29, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. RIVETT.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 23699) to grant to John T. Rivett the privilege to make commutation of his homestead entry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John T. Rivett be, and he is hereby, granted the privilege at his option to make commutation of his homestead entry of the SW. 4 of sec. 28, in T. 22 N. R. 50 W., sixth principal meridian, in the State of Nebraska, as provided by law for the making of commutation of homestead entries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ORVILLE WRIGHT AND WILBUR WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was Senate joint resolution 119, authorizing the Secretary of War to award gold medals to Orville Wright and Wilbur Wright.

The joint resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. HACKNEY. I object.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to page 31 of the calendar for the purpose of correcting an error.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER. The bills, Calendar Nos. 1152 and 1153, were objected to at the time by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Edwards] under a misapprehension of the facts as to the nature of the bills. He afterwards withdrew the objection, but is not now on the floor of the House. We have since passed one bill of exactly the same kind coming from the Ways and Means Committee. I ask that these bills may now be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

COLUMBUS GAS AND FUEL COMPANY

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2911) for the relief of the Columbus Gas and Fuel Company. Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of money not otherwise appropriated, to the Columbus Gas and Fuel Company, of Columbus, Ohio, successors to the Central Ohio Natural Gas and Fuel Company, of Columbus, Ohio, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding, the sum of $1,820.81, the amount of taxes improperly collected by the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LOGAN NATURAL GAS AND FUEL COMPANY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (8. 3748) for the relief of the Logan Natural Gas and Fuel Company, of Columbus, Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Logan Natural Gas and Fuel Company (Incorporated), of Columbus, Ohio, the sum of $184.45, the amount of taxes improperly collected by the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI J. BILLINGS AND HEIRS OF JAMES H. DOYLE.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 30 of the calendar and take up Calendar Nos. 1102, 1104, being the bills (H. R. 8739) for the relief of Levi J. Billings and (H. R. 21783) for the relief of the legal representatives of James H. Doyle, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection or withhold it for a moment.

Mr. HACKNEY, I object.
Mr. DALZELL. I do not believe the gentleman has read the report or else he would not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that we have concluded the calling of the Private Calendar, and this is a request for unanimous consent to return to certain bills indicated. Of course, objection would be in order if the gentleman desires to object.

Mr. HACKNEY. I demand the regular order. Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, the regular order is finishing the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion, under the terms of the order, which is that it shall be in order in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole House, to consider all bills on the Private Calendar to the consideration of which no objection is made, that bills having been called and objection being made, under the construction of that order it would require unanimous consent to return to them.

MILLE LAC BAND, CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. BEDE. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill which was passed without prejudice and not objected to—the bill (S. 5330) for the relief of the Mille Lac band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes-which I now call up and ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill,

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims be, and it is hereby, given jurisdiction to hear and determine a suit or suits to be brought by and on behalf of the Mille Lac band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of Minnesota, against the United States on account of losses sustained by them or the Chippewas of Minnesota by reason of the opening of the Mille Lac Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, embracing about 61,000 acres of land, to public settlement under the general land laws of the United States; and from any final judgment or decree of the Court of Claims either party shall have the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the said cause shall be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed: Provided, That upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree the fees to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by the said Mille Lac band of Indians, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due said band or to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6252) to promote the administration of justice in the navy, with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object to that. I think the amendment ought to be read.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to the amendment of the Senate and ask for a conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to explain, before the House disagrees to the Senate amendment, what is the difference between the Senate amendment and the House bill? Wherein do they differ?

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to compare the two bills sufficiently to indicate every point of difference. There are several vital points of difference, and one particularly in section 13, with regard to the use of depositions in court-martial cases. The House Committee on Naval Affairs considered that provision of the departmental bill very carefully, and we concluded it was not wise to allow unrestricted use of depositions in criminal cases.

The Senate bill which has just been read, and which was put on to our bill as an amendment, contains that provision with regard to the use of depositions, and it is largely for that reason that we desire to get the matter into conference to adjust that

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to ask the gentleman if the Senate bill does not allow it to be optional with the defendant as to whether he shall be tried before a deck court-martial or a regular court-martial, and what provision has the House bill on that subject?

Mr. ROBERTS. There was a provision in each bill with regard to the rights of an enlisted man giving him a privilege of objecting to the deck court if he saw fit. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I have not compared the bills carefully enough as yet to say just wherein the two provisions with regard to that portion differ.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The rights on that proposition are reserved in both bills.

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, certainly; the rights of the enlisted men are reserved in both bills.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. The Chair announced the following conferees:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. DAWSON, and Mr. PADGETT.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to continue the remarks I made in regard to H. R. 12898 in the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record upon the bill indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, January 29, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] made a speech on the floor of this House attacking the provisions of a bill which I introduced (H. R. 12898) to change the proceedings regulating the admission of patients to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and also attacking the report of the special committee appointed in the Fifty-ninth Congress to investigate the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane, of which committee I had the honor to be chairman.

I greatly regret that the gentleman saw fit to make his speech during my absence from the House, especially in view of the fact that when the bill was on the calendar, on the 14th day of December, 1908, owing to the absence of the gentleman from Florida and at his special request, made through the gentle-man from Indiana [Mr. Cox], that he would like to have consideration of the bill postponed until he returned to Washington, as he desired to speak upon it, I allowed the bill to go over until January 25, when the gentleman objected to unanimous consent to have the bill transferred to the Union Calendar from the House Calendar.

I did not intend to say anything in regard to the bill or in regard to the investigation made by our committee until the bill came up properly in the House; but on account of the remarks of the gentleman from Florida on Friday last, most of which are erroneously stated, I desire to place in the Record the reasons for the unanimous report of the Committee on the District of Columbia on the bill and certain facts in regard to the investigation, in order that Members of the House may be apprised of the true state of affairs before the bill comes up for consideration on the 8th of February.

It is true-the gentleman from Florida introduced the resolution in the Fifty-ninth Congress for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane, and that he appeared before the committee on several occasions and made statements in opposition to the then and present superintendent of the hospital.

It appears from the remarks of the gentleman from Florida that he alone was disappointed because the committee, upon the evidence before it, saw fit to make a report which substantially found that the accusations made against the hospital and its superintendent were without foundation.

The bill which I introduced to change the proceedings for admission to the hospital was the result of the complete and exhaustive investigation which the special committee made both into the management of the institution and all of its branches, and the methods of commitment to the hospital which the committee found were conflicting and improper.

The bill was carefully drawn after a full examination into the laws of the various States of the Union in regard to the method of commitment of patients to hospitals for the insane, and it was fully discussed by a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the majority of whom are lawyers, and afterwards by the full committee, which made a unanimous and favorable report thereon.

The only difference that I can see between the gentleman from Florida and myself in regard to one of the most important features of the bill-that in regard to the commitment of patients without the formality of calling a jury unless demanded by the patient or one of his relatives or friends-is that the gentleman prefers to treat a suspected insane person as a criminal, while I and the committee insist that such insane person ought to be treated as a person suffering with a disease.

The gentleman remarked, under the heading "Some incidents of Doctor White's management and supervision," that over 30 witnesses testified to the failure of the superintendent to visit the buildings and inspect the wards for long intervals, but he gave Many, if not the names only of 9 witnesses who so testified. all, of these witnesses testified as to the careful and humane treatment of the patients and that the physicians connected with the hospital made daily visits to the patients in the various wards. Most of these witnesses complain of the long hours of work or charge the superintendent with favoritism of other employees over them; but the superintendents of other institutions who testified before the investigating committee swore that in every hospital for the insane the attendants are constantly complaining in regard to their hours of service and what they consider lack of sufficient help, and that they invariably criticise the superintendent for not allowing them greater liberties than those fixed by him for the good of the hospital.

To show how carelessly the gentleman from Florida examined the testimony given by these 9 witnesses, I will quote from their testimony as follows:

testimony, as follows

C. W. Teates (p. 1258) testified that he thought that there should be more attendants at the hospital and (p. 1260) that the hours were too long. He also testified (p. 1262) that some of the attendants were careless, but that they were not cruel to patients. He further testified (p. 1259), in answer to a question as to how often the doctors came through the wards, that: "Doctor Glasscock came through twice a day and Doctor Stack only once, but sometimes twice or three times, depending upon how many we had sick. ing the day some time." We always had physicians there dur-He also said (p. 1263) that the doctors were attentive to their duties.

T. W. Belt testified (p. 172) that Teates on many occasions ill treated patients.

Rose Herbert severely criticised Doctor White because other employees of the hospital were promoted to better positions than she had.

Mary McLaughlin testified that there was not sufficient help at the hospital, although the treatment of patients was very good. She complained of the long hours of service and criticised Doctor White accordingly.

Albert C. Hayden criticised the superintendent for not employing a greater number of attendants (p. 345), and made complaint in regard to "long hours" (p. 348).

C. J. Harbaugh complained of an "insufficiency of help" (p. 297), and said that patients were not treated cruelly (p. 297)

Arthur Nabors testified that patients were "treated all right" (p. 292). He complained of insufficiency of help and pay, and criticised Doctor White therefor (p. 294).

W. J. Lyon testified that he never saw patients abused (p. 1157). He also testified that Doctor Hummer was in charge of his ward (p. 1158).

Spencer Herbert, a witness, testified that Lyon had abused patients (p. 30). Lyon resigned (p. 1157).

Albert Ball complained of insufficiency of help in the kitchen

(p. 289).

N. H. Harnish criticised Doctor White because a reduction was made in his salary from $75 to $60 per month (p. 1136)

These nine witnesses, with their grievances against Doctor White in one way or another, were particularly referred to by the gentleman in an attempt to strengthen his argument; but let us examine some of the testimony of other witnesses who perhaps are included in the balance of the 30 witnesses referred to by the gentleman, but whose names he omitted to mention.

Many of the witnesses testified as to the frequency of the visits of the superintendent to the various wards of the institution, for instance:

Philip J. Martin testified (p. 484) that the superintendent came through his ward every Sunday.

Joseph Klug testified (p. 107) that Doctor White came through his ward as often as the superintendent who preceded him.

Emma Butler testified (p. 1302) that Doctor White came through every Sunday.

Patrick Doody (p. 309) testified that Doctor White visited his ward frequently.

Dr. L. H. Taylor testified that Doctor White went over the hospital wards once a week.

Andrew Klug testified (p. 70) that Doctor White visited the wards, and stated, "I don't know whether he has been over while I was away or not."

Jessie Ferrall testified (p. 471) that Doctor White visited her ward frequently, and that Doctor Clark "comes through occasionally," but that Doctor O'Malley, a female physician at the hospital, "makes the regular rounds," she being the doctor in charge of the female patients.

Louise Hoy (p. 1173) testified that Doctor O'Malley visited her ward, which is a female ward, every day, but that Doctor White did not often go through that ward.

E. A. Jarrett (p. 377) testified that Doctor White visited his ward three or four times between the 11th of January and the 15th of May, while the witness was there, but he stated, "I am not there all the time."

Charles J. Burch testified (p.631): "The superintendent comes into B building every Sunday, and he visits all the new patients and has quite a lengthy conversation with these new cases.

Mary Edwards, in charge of ward containing suicide patients, testified (p. 477) that Doctor White made a visit through her ward once a week.

Dr. B. R. Logie testified (p.731): "Doctor White has no special days for visiting my ward. He comes over very often and goes through building R more frequently than he does any other building. Then he comes over and consults with me whenever I ask him to do so or when anything goes wrong in the department." He further testified (p. 717) that there were 371 patients under his charge.

D. J. Donohue testified (p. 278):

I have seen Doctor White go through my ward speaking to men of my ward. I have seen Doctor White and his assistant physicians visiting the Howard Hall on Sunday after Sunday. I have also seen the assistant physicians visiting the wards at all times during the day. I have seen Doctor Swain; he came at all hours—in fact, he would come often when you least expected him. I have seen Doctor Fitch at all times going on the wards.

Roger Cullinane testified (p. 285): "I have generally seen him [Doctor White] go through there on Sundays." He also testified that a physician went through his ward every day.

There are many other instances in the testimony which prove the statements of the gentleman from Florida to be erroneous, and, as I before stated, most of the people who testified as to the infrequent visits of the superintendent had some personal grievance against him. It should also be remembered that the individual attendants are on duty for a short part of the day only, and therefore they are not able to testify how often during the twenty-four hours of the day the superintendent or the physicians went through their respective wards. Some of the attendants work in the daytime and others in the nighttime.

The charge that the gentleman makes in regard to the number of witnesses who testified that the food was not good is also incorrect. On the contrary, the great majority of the witnesses testified that the food was good and wholesome; but of course some of the witnesses, including patients and attendants, had made complaints in regard to the character of the food and the method of cooking it. The committee found that now and then complaints had been made by patients and attendants in regard to the food in most of the institutions of this character. A reference to the index of the testimony at page 1873 will show just exactly how the witnesses testified in regard to the food. bill of fare used in the hospital will be found at page 522 and page 723

In a large institution of this kind it will sometimes happen that the food will not be properly cooked. A careful reading of the report of the committee at page 13, under the subdivision "Sixth. As to food," will show how exhaustively the committee examined into this question.

In regard to the charges of cruel treatment of patients, they were made in almost every case by a patient, a discharged patient, a discharged employee, or an employee with a grievance against the superintendent of the hospital, and the committee gave this kind of evidence careful consideration. But I desire to call the attention of the House to the character of the testimony of some of the witnesses who were called to prove the charges of abuse of patients. Among these are a number of witnesses mentioned in the gentleman's remarks.

Cornelia L. Corbett, a patient, was called as a witness and testified (p. 137). This witness complained in regard to her commitment and testified that she was not insane. When asked her reason for appearing at the hearing, she said: "I came as a voluntary witness to state what I witnessed while I was there." As a matter of fact, the people who sought to prove these charges called this patient as their witness.

Roger J. Cullinane (p. 285) testified that he was employed as attendant in charge of White Ash ward, where patients were a violent class; that patients were always treated well. "We didn't have no straps after Doctor White came there," nor were patients restrained in that ward, but "would sometimes lock them up;" that strait-jackets were never used nor were patients abused. Although this witness was discharged from the hospital and called to support the charges of abuse of patients he very positively stated that he never witnessed any such abuses. This is the kind of testimony that should be given credence.

Lloyd Green, another witness called to support the charges, testified that he was discharged for being asleep while on duty, but that he never witnessed any abuse of patients (p. 268) although he had been employed there for about six months. He also testified that patients were treated well. Is not this testi-mony more worthy of belief than that given by people who are unfriendly to the superintendent?

James Albert Ogden, another discharged attendant (p. 261), called to support the charges, testified that he never saw patients mistreated, but that he had "trouble in handling them a little rough sometimes; but we never struck them or anything * We was always very careful; everybody I ever saw was just as careful as they possibly could be.'

The committee hesitated to believe the testimony given by certain witnesses, formerly attendants, who were hostile to the superintendent, and some of whom were discharged for cruelty The following is a brief analysis of such testimony:

Bernard Allen, who is designated in the gentleman's remarks (p. 197), testified that the abuse he witnessed was the placing of strait-jackets on patients, which, he said, was necessary in some cases and in other cases because of lack of attendants; that he was discharged for "refusal to take a wheelbarrow and clean up around the buildings," although the records of the hospital show that he was discharged for insubordination (p. Owen S. Allen (p. 231) testified that he had struck patients in self-defense, to protect himself. "Often, you know, they would become unruly, and I would have to do the best I could. * * * I would have to take them and throw them in a room and lock them up." He admitted (p. 234) that this abuse was not done for vindictive purposes, but only in order to protect himself; that he and other attendants meant to be kind to patients. He also testified that he was discharged for sleeping while on duty. The hospital records show (p. 414) that he was discharged for neglect of duty and the use of intoxicating liquors on the hospital grounds.

Townsend Belt (p. 170) testified that patients were abused;

Townsend Belt (p. 170) testified that patients were abused; that he was "fired because I went to see the committee of the Medico-Legal Society," but he admitted that he was charged with being asleep while on duty. The hospital records show, however, that Belt was discharged for being asleep while on duty and for being under the influence of liquor.

Joseph W. Belt (p. 327) testified that an attendant named Hawkins would abuse patients by striking them with a piece of insulated wire and that it happened on several occasions, and, although he was employed from October, 1903, to January, 1906, when he was discharged, he could not remember the names of the patients struck, except one named "Rube." He also said he was working under Hawkins and that he did not know why he had been discharged. Hawkins was before the committee and positively denied Belt's charges, and further testified that Belt was never under him as an attendant (p. 713).

Milton Berry (p. 1056) testified that he saw patients abused and that he "only seen them treated rough in case of necessity where they would have to be treated so in case of self-defense.
* * I have seen them toweled, but only to subdue them when they couldn't manage them." He also stated that he himself struck patients in self-defense "only when it was necessary, and I didn't have proper help to handle them otherwise." He admitted that he never reported attacks of attendants on patients, in accordance with the rules and that they never used strait-jackets on his ward, although he had much trouble with patients and that patients were not cruelly treated "unless it was necessary to protect the attendant." He admitted that he was discharged.

Spencer Herbert (p. 27) testified as to abuse of patients, but admitted that he never reported such abuses, as the rules prescribed; that he saw but one patient "strapped in bed" and that he supposed the patient was dangerous; that strait-jackets were used on patients, but that they were not painful. This witness admitted that he made an affidavit at the request of Doctor Emmons, who was one of the persons who instigated the charges; that he read it over before signing it; and when his attention was called to the fact that in such affidavit he swore that he saw "patients" strapped in bed, he said he meant to say that he saw only one patient strapped. The hospital records (p. 404) show that this witness was discharged for being absent without leave.

Thomas L. McMurray (p. 35) testified as to many cases of abuses of patients, although he admitted that he never interfered with nor reported such cases to the superintendent, as he should have done under the rules. He said he was discharged, the charge being "an act with intent to strike a patient, and for excessive use of material." The hospital records show (p. 411) that this witness was discharged for excessive use of material. The charges of abuse of patients were denied by the testimony of Maenche, the foreman of laundry, where McMurray was employed (p. 1390). Charges of excessive use of material, absence from duty without leave, threats to do bodily harm to patients, and ignoring special order of superintendent were also filed against him by Maenche, among other things. These charges were substantiated by the sworn statement, taken from the hospital records, of Harry Eno (p. 412). There is also a letter on the records from his former employer stating, among other things, that he could never be relied upon, because of insobriety (p. 413).

Patrick O'Connor (p. 176) testified that he saw one case of cruelty, that of Attendant Eugene Skinner "striking and choking a patient," but admits that he did not report the case. This was positively denied by Skinner (p. 1462). O'Connor admitted that he was discharged for disobeying orders of the superintendent.

Clarence Pendleton (p. 1032) testified as to abuse of a patient by an attendant named Lloyd, and also other abuses. He admitted that he himself had struck patients, but only in selfdefense, and that he was discharged from the hospital for refusing to work on wheelbarrows. Burch, a supervisor, testified (p. 635) that Pendleton was discharged for refusing to take the patients out and clean around the buildings. Lloyd denied Pendleton's charges (p. 1501).

Thornton O. Pyles, a very troublesome employee, and a man who was constantly complaining to the superintendent about long hours of work, lack of attendants, and various other things, and the man who was engaged to assist the people who made the charges, testified that patients were abused by use of straitjackets; that he put them on patients himself, and that it was necessary in many cases, in order to prevent the patient from hurting himself and because of the insufficient number of attendants to care for the patient (p. 81). Pyles was employed at the hospital for more than two years, and testified that he saw many cases of cruelty, but when asked to specifically state a particular case or give a name he could "not just recall any particular case" (p. 89); that patients would abuse each other; that attendants would strike patients in self-defense, but that "he could not positively say" that he ever saw an attendant voluntarily knock a patient down. Pyles also testified that he saw bed saddles, and assisted in using them upon patients, but that "it was done as gently as possible," and that it was not Chappelear, a witness and former attendant who resigned, testified that he saw Pyles strike patients (p. 1501). Pyles also testified that he was discharged for presenting a petition to board of visitors, but the hospital records show that he was discharged for conduct prejudicial to the good order of the hospital and to the interests of the service (p. 402). Pyles was present at nearly all of the hearings and was busily engaged in attempting to prove charges by the aid of attendants and discharged attendants. The committee concluded that the testimony of this witness was not worthy of consideration, but the gentleman from Florida considers Pyles's testimony as of the greatest importance.

The evidence shows, beyond a doubt, that whenever charges of abuse of patients were made against attendants an investigation was had in every case and, wherever proved, the attendant was dismissed.

This is the character of testimony upon which the gentleman bases his argument in regard to abuses of patients at the Government Hospital for the Insane. The committee went over all of the evidence with great care and found it necessary to eliminate some of the testimony given by witnesses which was so strongly contradicted by others, and especially in the cases of those witnesses who were former employees of the hospital and were discharged for good reason.

The testimony also shows that the following attendants were summarily dismissed for violation of the hospital rules, and especially upon the charge of abuse of patients:

Acton, Bernard Allen, Owen S. Allen, Baldwin, Barnes, Joseph W. Belt, Townsend W. Belt, Berry, Bowen, Cullinane, Green, Hall, Herbert, Hill, Hodges, Mayfield, McMurray, O'Connor, Ogden, Pendleton, Penn, Pyles, Satterfield, Spencer, Tennyson, Weedon, Wilson.

A reference to the index of the testimony, at page 1943, will give some valuable information on this subject.

On page 1953 of the report will be found the names of witnesses, both patients and attendants, who testified in regard to the kind and humane treatment of the patients at the hospital. These witnesses number more than 70.

The committee also heard the testimony of the superintendent, the members of the medical staff of the hospital, and a large number of attendants, all of whom denied in positive terms that the patients were abused.

The rules of the hospital provide for the discharge of employees who are found to have abused the patients. These rules make it imperative for the employees to report any cases of abuse of patients to the superintendent. Several of the witnesses admitted, however, that every once in a while an attendant would abuse a patient, but that in every case where such conduct on the part of an attendant was brought to the attention of the superintendent the matter was promptly investigated, and where the charge was proven the attendant was discharged.

It is reasonable to suppose, after reading the testimony given by the superintendents of the state hospitals who appeared before the committee, that in every institution for the insane an attendant will be found who, for some reason or other, will assault a patient, but it was the opinion of the committee that such manner of abuse is not tolerated when found out. These superintendents also testified that attendants who have a tendency to abuse patients have no difficulty in obtaining employment at other institutions, and that in some cases it is exceedingly hard to get a good class of attendants, but that they have to take those who make application for the position who seem to be qualified to handle and care for insane persons, because of the fact that people do not care to seek employment at institutions for the insane,

It is also reasonable to suppose that upon the least provocation, from conversations had with patients or some other source, relatives of patients will frequently imagine and charge that gross abuse is done them.

One case presented itself in this investigation which can be taken as a good illustration of this:

Nannie H. Griffin, daughter of Cecelia J. Griffin, a patient, testified that her mother was abused and mistreated by physicians and attendants (p. 489), and similar testimony was given by another daughter, Jennie H. Cole (p. 51). A son of the patient, Milton E. Griffin, however, testified (p. 789) that his mother received kind treatment and that he had no complaint to make. He said that he "never saw any evidence of cruel treatment of any patient," although he visited the hospital every week. The sisters testified that their mother had received a fracture of the ribs caused by carelessness of attendants, while the son testified that she received the fracture testified that her mother was abused and mistreated by phytendants, while the son testified that she received the fracture from a fall while carrying a blanket, and that the accident was una voidable.

The gentleman, in his remarks, refers to the testimony of Jennie H. Cole, but very carefully omits mention of the testimony of her brother, Milton E. Griffin, who strongly contradicted her.

How can the gentleman state that over 60 witnesses testified to the cruel and brutal treatment of patients, when the reverse is the fact, as shown by the evidence? The gentleman lays great stress on the testimony of the witnesses Burroughs, Pyles, McKnight, Berry, Pendleton, Bernard Allen, and Thomas Seaton. If any fair-minded man would take the trouble to read the testimony given by these witnesses whose names I have just mentioned, and then read the contradiction of their testimony by disinterested witnesses, I am sure he will wonder why so much importance was given to this testimony in the gentleman's

As a complete answer to the statements made by the gentleman from Florida, in regard to the investigation of the Government Hospital for the Insane, I desire to read and insert in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, the report of the special committee to investigate the charges against the hospital.

INVESTIGATION OF GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Mr. Olcort, from the Special Committee on Investigation of the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia, submitted the following report:

To the House of Representatives:

To the House of Representatives:

The special committee appointed by the Speaker of the House, pursuant to House resolution No. 277, on April 21, 1906, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint from the membership of the House a committee of five, with full power and whose duty it shall be to make a full and complete investigation of the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane and report their findings and conclusions to the House; said committee is empowered to send for persons and papers, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to administer oaths, te take testimony and reduce the same to writing, and to employ such clerical and stenographic help as may be necessary, all expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House," hereby respectfully submits its report.

In pursuance of said resolution the Speaker appointed as such committee Messrs. Olcott, Smyser, Barchffeld, Hay, and Padestt.

On May 1, 1906, the committee organized, and on May 2 visited the Government Hospital for the Insane and made a personal inspection thereof.

On May 1, 1906, the committee organized, and on May 2 visited the Government Hospital for the Insane and made a personal inspection thereof.

Notifications to attend the first hearing were given to Hen. Frank Clark and Hon. Willam Sulzer, Members of the House of Representatives, who had spoken on behalf of those who had made charges against the institution, and who had appeared before the Committee on Rules prior to the time when the resolution was reported from that committee. Notices of the first hearings were also sent to Dr. C. M. Emmons and Mr. Richard P. Evans, representing the Medico-Legal Society.

On May 4, 1906, public hearings were begun.

On May 7, 1906, Hon. Robert M. Wallace was appointed a member of the committee, vice Hon. L. P. Padeett, resigned. No other changes have been made in the committee since its appointment.

The committee at its first hearing decided that the investigation should cover a period of time beginning October 1, 1903, the date of the appointment of Dr. William A. White as superintendent.

From May 4, 1906, to June 28, 1906, the committee held 33 public hearings, and on November 26, 27, and 28 visited the Central Islip State Hospital and the Manhattan State Hospital, in New York. A further public hearing was held on December 13, 1906.

At the first hearing the committee gave notice to Doctor Emmons and Mr. Evans, representing the Medico-Legal Society, that the committee desired to examine any witnesses named by them who could shed any light upon the charges which had been preferred, and requested them to furnish a list of witnesses they desired to have examined.

In the examination of witnesses were examined.

In the examination of witnesses were examined.

In the examination of witnesses were examined.

There were examined under oath some 287 witnesses, a great number of whom were called at the request of those who had made the charges. The others were persons who had been or were employees in the hospital, persons with whom the hospital had business relations, and a number institutions of similar character throughout the country and officials connected with boards of lunacy in States of the United States.

The several superintendents who were examined were all requested to make, and did make, an examination of the Government Hospital for the Insane before giving their testimony.

Notwithstanding the main desire on the part of the Members of the House of Representatives asking for the investigation was to cause an investigation of the charges of cruelty and ill treatment only, the committee went thoroughly into the entire question of the management of the hospital and all matters relating thereto, as directed by the resolution.

The committee submits with its report the printed copy of the testimony, which, with the index, aggregates 2,010 pages, and a digest of the evidence. The committee therefore does not deem it necessary further to present details of such evidence, except to refer to some of the prominent facts bearing upon specific subjects of inquiry.

The GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

THE GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE,

the prominent facts bearing upon specific subjects of inquiry.

THE GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

The hospital was created and is governed by laws passed by the Congress of the United States, now contained in the Revised Statutes, sections 8409 to 8444. (See record, p. 1786 et seq.)

The statutes provide that there shall be in the District of Columbia a government hospital for the insane, the objects of which shall be the most humane care and enlightened curative treatment of the insane of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the District of Columbia; that there shall be a chief executive officer of the hospital, called a "superintendent" appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall be entitled to a salary of $4,000 a year; that the superintendent shall give bond for the faithful performance of his duties, shall be a well-educated physician, possessing competent experience in the care and treatment of the insane, who shall reside on the premises and devote his whole time to the welfare of the institution, and, subject to the approval of the board of visitors, engage and discharge all employees and determine their wages and duties; that he shall be the responsible disbursing agent of the institution and exofficio the secretary of the board of visitors.

The superintendent is directed to make an annual report to Congress at each regular session, which shall show in detail the receipts and expenditures for all purposes connected with the hospital for the fiscal year preceding such session. A board of visitors is provided for, consisting of nine citizens of the District to be appointed by the President, which board shall select its own president, and, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, make any needful by-laws for the government of themselves, of the superintendent and his employees, and of the patients not inconsistent with law. It is provided that the board of visitors shall visit the hospital at stated periods and exercise so careful a supervision over its expendit service from causes which arose during and were produced by said service.

In 1884 a statute was passed, now section 8416 of the United States Revised Statutes, providing that—"Any inmate of the Soldiers' Home who is now or may become insane shall, upon an order of the president of the board of commissioners of the Soldiers' Home, be admitted to said nospital and treated therein; and the expenses of maintaining any such person shall be paid from the Soldiers' Home fund."

Section 8417 provides that—
"Any inmate of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, who may become insane, shall, upon an order of the president of the Board of Managers of the said National Home, be admitted to the Government Hospital for the Insane and treated therein * * ""

Section 8418 provides that—
"Upon the application of the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to transfer to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia all persons who, having been charged with officers, and all persons who have been or shall be convicted of any offense in a court of the United States and are imprisoned in any state prison or penitentiary of any State or Territory, and who during the term of their imprisonment have or shall become and be insane."

Section 8419 provides as follows:

during the term of their imprisonment have or shall become and be insane."

Section 8419 provides as follows:

"If any person, charged with crime, be found, in the court before which he is so charged, to be an insane person, such court shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who may order such person to be confined in the Hospital for the Insane, and, if he be not indigent, he and his estate shall be charged with expenses of his support in the hospital."

Section 8420 provides for the transfer of insane prisoners to state hospital."

Section 8420 provides for the transfer of insane prisoners to state hospitals when there shall not be accommodations for such persons at the government hospital.

Section 8421 provides for the return of insane convicts restored to sanity to the prison from which the transfer was made. Section 8422 provides for the delivery to the court of insane criminals or persons charged with a crime and who have been restored to sanity. Section 8423 provides that an insane person not charged with any breach of the peace shall never be confined in the United States jail in the District of Columbia.

Section 8424 provides as follows:

"All indigent insane persons residing in the District of Columbia at the time they become insane shall be entitled to the benefits of the hospital for the insane, and shall be admitted upon order of the Commissioners of the said District, which may be granted after due process of law, showing the person to be insane and unable to support himself and family or himself, if he has no family, under the visitation of insanity: Provided, That one-half of the expenses of the indigent patients from the District of Columbia shall be reported to the Treasury Department and charged against the appropriations to be paid toward the expenses of the District by the General Government, without regard to the date of their admission."

Sections 8425 to 8441, inclusive, providing for the admission and commitment of patients and the method of procedure in such cases, are conflicting and vague. The whole subject, however, is fully discussed on page 44 hereof under the head of "Commitment."

Section 8442 provides for the manner of disbursement of moneys appropriated by Congress for the support of the hospital. Section 8443 provides for the sale or exchange of surplus products and waste material of the hospital. Section 8444 provides for the receipt and disbursement of private funds of patients.

First. As to the superintendent,—From a personal examination of the hospital and a careful investigation of its management under Dr. William A. White, superintendent, from Doctor White's own testimony and that of his medical staff, from the testimony of the attendants formerly in the employ of the institution and now employed, from the testimony of the superintendents of other similar institutions, and of other persons having knowledge of the needs of hospitals for the insane, it is the opinion of the committee that Dr. William A. White is fully qualified for the position of superintendent, is an able and distinguished allenist, and an efficient, honest, and progressive manager of all of the several branches of the hospital, and a careful and humane care taker of the patients in his charge; that he conducts the business affairs of the institution and looks after the medical and p and of the several branches of the hospital, and a careful and humane care taker of the patients in his charge; that he conducts the business affairs of the institution and looks after the medical and physical affairs of the institution and looks after the medical and physical affairs of the Insane on October 1, 1903, succeeding Dr. A. B. Richardson. Since he assumed the office he has systematized the method of promotion, and has made a gradual increase of the salaries of the attendants; he has created the position of clinical director, the occupant of which, among other things, has charge of all of the daily records of the patients in the institution, and in this connection has not only adopted a complete system of clinical records, but has caused to be prepared such a record of every patient in the hospital from the time of his admission, he has created the position of antron the position of store-pathological department, all of which have materially benefited the institution and its patients. Upon his recommendation, the board of visitors approved of the appointment of a woman physician to have especial charge and supervision of the women's department of he hospital. He also instituted a system of examinations of attendants about to enter the training school, so that the standard of nurses graduating therefrom would be superior to that which obtained at the time he became superlistender.

He has, so far as the management of the buildings would permittender the so-called "bed saddle" as a means of mechanical restraint.

He has, so far as the management of the buildings would permittender the straint of the so-called bed saddle as a means of mechanical staff every Sunday, at which meeting scientific questions affecting the interests of the institution are discussed.

He has created and caused to be installed a system of the medical staff every Sunday, at which meeting scientific questions affecting the interests of the institution are discussed.

He has created and caused to be histalled a system of the medica patients.

The work of these gentlemen is arduous. They live on the institution grounds, and are practically constantly on duty. One of them, the night medical officer, is actually on duty every night from 9 p. m. to 7 a. m. and visits the various wards during that time. He is always on call and can be found in case of disturbance in any of the wards by telephonic communication. In case of emergency he can summon other physicians. The physicians are appointed after a competitive civil-service examination.

There are 15 physicians including the light of the communication of the communication of the communication of the communication.

There are 15 physicians, including the superintendent, on the staff, assigned to the various departments. They are entitled, with their families, to maintenance at the hospital, which the committee thinks is roper and similar to arrangements provided for in many other instituproper and similar to arrangements provided for in many other institutions.

To show the standing of the several members of the medical staff, it should be mentioned in this report that they hold positions in medical schools and colleges as follows:

Dr. William A. White, superintendent, is professor of nervous and mental disease in Georgetown University and professor of mental disease in George Washington University. Dr. I. W. Blackburn, pathologist, is professor of morbid anatomy in Georgetown University and in George Washington University. Dr. Charles H. Clark, clinical director, is professor of mervous disease in George Washington University. Dr. Shepherd I. Franz, psychologist, is professor of physiology in George Washington University. Dr. William H. Hough, junior assistant physician, is lecturer on medical zoology in Georgetown University.

The above-named officers of the Government Hospital for the Insane conduct weekly clinics at the hospital. These are attended by students from George Washington and Georgetown universities and from the United States Naval School and the United States Army School.

Doctor Blackburn, in charge of the pathological department, is a well-known pathologist, and there is no doubt that the work which he performs is important from a scientific standpoint. This department is devoted primarily to the study of the lesions of the brain and other organs associated with mental disease. It has three divisions, namely: (1) The division of morbid anatomy and pathological histology; (2) the division of clinical pathology, and (3) the division of photography.

The department of morbid anatomy has a well-equipped autopsy room, with an amphitheater seating about 40 students. Here are given weekly demonstrations in autopsy work and morbid anatomy to the students of the medical departments of Georgetown and George Washington universities and to the training school for nurses of the hospital. This department has a museum in which are preserved all important pathological specimens, now numberi their visits and treatment of patients. There is no doubt as to their efficiency.

The surgical department is also worthy of note. It has an operating amphitheater with a seating capacity for about 60. Adjoining this room and to the rear are the surgeon's room, room for instruments and dressings, and the anæsthetist's room. This department is thoroughly modern in all its appointments, the operating room being especially well equipped. The floor is of white tile, the wainscoting of white Italian marble, and the side walls and ceiling white enameled. The room is equipped with a dressing sterilizer, instrument sterilizer, sterilizers for hot and cold water, an instrument case, operating table, instrument tables, and all the various accessories necessary for a well-equipped operating room.

Surgical clinics are held frequently, and in many instances physicians and medical students of the city have attended. This amphitheater is also used in connection with the training school for nurses, recitations and demonstrations being frequently held there.

Since the investigation the committee has been informed that the superintendent has appointed a psychologist for special research work in the realm of abnormal psychology. The laboratory has been equipped with about $3,000 worth of modern psychological apparatus and appliances, and is sufficiently well installed to take up any line of work in this field.

The psychologist is at present at work in connection and collaboration with the clinical department in outlining systematic and uniform methods.

The psychologist is at present at work in connection and collaboration with the clinical department in outlining systematic and uniform methods of clinical examination into the mental condition of patients for the purpose of greater uniformity in the records, and also of rendering them more useful for purposes of study, statistical or otherwise.

Third. As to the charges of cruel treatment and abuse of patients.—
It must be remembered that these charges have been made in almost every case by either a patient now in the hospital, a patient who for one reason or another has been discharged, or by a discharged or resigned employee. The committee has heard everything that can be said by all of the witnesses of any of these classes, and has given due weight to their testimony. There unquestionably have been some cases of cruelty to patients by attendants, but in no case was this sanctioned by the superintendent of the hospital or any of the medical staff; but, on the other hand, most of the witnesses have testified that upon accepting their service the strictest injunctions were given to them by either the superintendent or some of the medical staff against harshness in the treatment of patients, and also that a printed book of rules and regulations embodying such direction was given or read to them at the beginning of their employment. Such rules are printed in the record. Not only this, but the testimony is practically unanimous that a violation of such rules was met by prompt punishment, usually by the immediate dismissal of the attendant. The testimony also shows that the following attendants were summarily dismissed for violating the rules of the institution, and particularly for abuse of patients:

Acton, Bemont Allen, Owen S. Allen, Baldwin, Barnes, Joseph W. Belt, Townsend W. Belt, Berry, Bowen, Cullinane, Green, Hall, Herbert, Hill, Hodges, Mayfield, McMurr

Isolated instances where charges of cruelty have been made can be cited, but the majority of witnesses, even though criticising the retention of particular patients in the institution and complaining about the food, etc., have said that the treatment of the patients was good.

Testimony has also been given as to specific cases of abuse of patients by attendants, but in almost every one of these cases the charges have been denied in positive terms by the attendants who were charged with such abuse or by the physicians of the hospital or other employees. Among charges that were made was that of giving patients food by means of a feeding tube, used as a method of punishment. This is not only disproved, but the testimony which sought to show this was the case was absurd.

As to the charges of so-called "toweling" of patients, there is no proof as to this alleged method of abuse. Although the wimess, Otis A. Wilson, a discharged attendant, swore that he himself toweled patients, from his manner and contradiction of his own statements the committee is of opinion that this testimony is unworthy of serious consideration.

from his manner and contradiction of his own statements the committee is of opinion that this testimony is unworthy of serious consideration.

As to the charges made in regard to improper bathing of patients in the same water that had been used by other patients, it appears from the testimony that in one or two instances this had been done, but that the rule of the hospital was against it and that the rule was usually maintained. Such charges were made by two patients and two discharged attendants, and their testimony was denied by a number of witnesses. The committee therefore believes that these charges have no foundation. After a careful examination into the charges of the abuse of patients and consideration of the testimony adduced in connection therewith, and having in mind the demeanor of the various witnesses while on the stand, the committee is of the opinion that such charges have not been sustained by the testimony.

The testimony not only of Doctor White and the gentlemen connected with his medical staff, but also of the superintendents of the institutions throughout the country, is that it is a matter of great difficulty to obtain a proper class of attendants in institutions for the insane, but that the superintendent exercises care in their selection.

Fourth. As to methods of restraint.—In the charges much talk was heard of strait-jackets. Strait-jackets in St. Elizabeth's Asylum do not exist, and have not for many years. On rare occasions a garment called a "camisole" is used, which consists of a canvas jacket which is laced in the back and which has long sleeves. When a patient becomes so violent that he seeks to do damage either to himself or another patient his camisole is placed upon him, so that the use of his arms is curtailed and the damage which he seeks to do, either to himself or to others, is made impossible. In the government hospital this has been used on a few occasions, but never without the direction of a physician, and then only when it was necessary for the protection of tife or and then only when it was necessary for the protection of life or limb. This method or restraint is used at other institutions, some superintendents having testified that it was a method of treatment rather than abuse. With two exceptions, superintendents of other institutions said of restraint.

The committee is convinced from the testimony that Doctor White since his appointment has made possible the lessening of this and other methods of restraint by the institution of the hydrotherapeutic treatment above described.

As to bed saddles, the use of these was discontinued upon the order of Doctor White shortly after he took office, to wit, on January 27, 1904.

As to indust of straps, During the time that the members of the connected visited the institution handcuffs were used on one individual confined in the criminal warm.

The sheet rest is a method of tying in bed a patient whose rest-lessness makes it possible, if not probable, that he may fall out of bed and seriously injure himself.

As before stated, none of these is ever applied except upon the immediate direction of a physician, and then only in cases of necessity for the welfare of the patient.

As before stated, none of these is ever applied except upon the immediate direction of a physician, and then only in cases of necessity for the welfare of the patient.

As before stated, none of these is ever applied except upon the immediate direction of a physician, and then only in cases of necessity for the welfare of the patient.

There was also submitted a list of institutions, nine in numbers of mechanical restraint at their respective boards of the consultation of the committee, however, went into this question with great care and took much testimony thereon. From an e state hospital in New Jersey the average time is fifteen hours. The Illinois Asylum for the Incurable Insane, before mentioned, is the only institution where there are the three shifts of eight hours each. It is true that the attendants are nominally on duty for eight hours, but none of the attendants can leave the hospital after their eight hours are completed, but must remain on duty for emergency calls,

As far as the pay of the attendants is concerned, there is not a great difference between the government hospital and other similar institutions. Generally speaking, the government hospital leads. There are differences in the minimum pay in some cases and the maximum in others, but the difference in the pay does not seem to be greater than local conditions might warrant.

The attendants are divided into male probationers, female probationers; full attendants, both male and female; charge attendants, male and female; nurses, male and female; chief nurses, male and female. Their salaries are as follows: The male probationers begin at $18, the female at $14; the male attendants receive from $20 to $30, the female attendants from $15 to $25; the male charge attendants receive from $25 to $35, and the female charge attendants from $20 to $30; the male nurses receive from $25 to $35, and the female assistant supervisors receive from $20 to $30; the male chief nurses receive from $30 to $40, and the female from $25 to $35; the male assistant supervisors receive from $40 to $60, and the female supervisors from $35 to $50, and the female from $30 to $45; the male supervisors receive from $40 to $60, and the female supervisors from $35 to $55.

The chief nurses now employed in this institution are both women, and the 300 attendants above mentioned include the chief nurses and appears to be done by the attendants themselves. There are only two chief nurses, and their duty is to supervise the nurses. A charge nurse is the one that is in charge of a ward.

The appointment fills out an application blank on these lines, an ministration. A training school is connected with the hospital, and the attendants when they are appointed are urged to enter the training school.

Most of the attendants live in the hospital. There are some few of them to whom permission is granted to live outside, where such permission does not interfere with the management of the institution. The preference of the administration is to have the attendants live in the hospital grounds, so that they may all be available in case of emergency. Inasmuch as the permission to live outside of the grounds is considered a privilege, these nurses do not get additional compensation. The domestics above referred to are few in number, about 12, and they do dining-room work and some general housework, to supplement that done by the attendants.

The employees (about 400 in number), besides the attendants, include the superintendent, the medical staff, the office force, the employees in the engineering department, and all others employed.

On pages 418 to 446 of the testimony will be found the pay roll as classified for the present superintendent when he took charge of the institution, and also the pay roll as at present classified by Doctor White. The committee is of the opinion that the list of employees could not be materially decreased without injury to the institution and to the welfare of the patients, and sees no reason to recommend any especial change in the number now employed. This is a matter that is properly cared for by the superintendent, and seems to have been done with a view to accomplishing the best results for the hospital as economically as is feasible.

In regard to the relation of the number of attendants to the number and the charges that have been made allege that there are not seems to the charges that have been made allege that there are not seems to be commend and the charges that have been made allege that there are not seems to have been done with a view to accomplishing the best results for the hospital as economically as is feasible.

In regard to the relation of the number of attendants to the number of patients, the charges that have been made allege that there are not enough attendants in the Government Hospital for the Insane to properly care for the patients, and a list, showing the ratios of attendants to patients in several institutions, was submitted to the committee by Mr. R. P. Evans.

Mr. R. P. Evans.

It is quite true, as stated by Mr. Evans in his testimony, that, from such list, it appears that there were more attendants in proportion to the number of patients in those several institutions than there are in the Government Hospital for the Insane; but the examination of super-Intendents of other institutions before the committee discloses the fact that, if anything, the government hospital has a greater number of attendants for the same number of patients than exists generally in other institutions. For instance, the Manhattan State Hospital, in New York City, has about 1 attendant to 8 patients; the Central Islip State Hospital, of New York, has a ratio of 1 to 10; the Central Islip State Hospital, of New York, has a ratio of 1 to 10; the Columbus State Hospital, of Ohlo, has a ratio of 1 to 13; the Illinois Asylum for the Incurable Insane has a ratio of 1 to 13; the Illinois State Hospital, of Ohlo, has a ratio of 1 to 10; the Western Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane has a ratio of 1 to 10.

The ratio at the Government Hospital for the Insane is 1 to 8. While the several institutions mentioned in the statement submitted by Mr. Evans have a greater number of attendants, considering the number of patients, with one single exception they are institutions having a very much smaller number of patients, and it is the opinion of the committee that where there is a small number of patients there will be a greater number of attendants, For instance, if in a single ward there are only three patients, it is necessary to have at least two attendants for that number of patients, so as to provide for the service of attendants day and night.

Mr. Evans mentioned one hospital, the South Dakota Hospital for the Insane, which has only 575 patients. In this hospital, hospital, hospytal and the patients, which has only 575 patients. In this hospital, hospytal hospytal is the committee of the service of attendants for that number of patients. In this hospital, hospytal hospytal hospytal is not the servic the service of attendants day and night.

Mr. Evans mentioned one hospital, the South Dakota Hospital for the Insane, which has only 575 patients. In this hospital, however, are 120 employees, including the attendants. It is a fair inference, and there seems to be no reasonable doubt, that these same 120 employees could care for almost double the number of patients without any failure to provide for their necessary attendance; and, generally speaking, when the size of the hospitals, the number of attendants, and the number of patients are considered, there is no reason to believe that the patients in the government hospital would be better served by an arbitrary increase of the number of attendants.

Sixth. As to the food.—The dietaries have been arranged with what appears to be considerable care. Besides the general dietary, special diets are prescribed for tubercular patients and for old and feeble patients. The complete dietary is contained in the testimony of Doctor Clark, on page 522. At page 723 will be found another diet list of the hospital.

The dietary is quite similar to that in other institutions. It should be stated that the dietary of this institution is mentioned in one of the standard works on the subject, "Diet in Health and Disease," by Julius Friedenwald, M. D., clinical professor of diseases of the stomach, and John Ruhrah, M. D., clinical professor of diseases of the stomach, and John Ruhrah, M. D., clinical professor of diseases of the stomach, and John Ruhrah, M. D., clinical professor of diseases of the tomach, and John Ruhrah, M. D., clinical professor of diseases of children, in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Md., in a list of dietaries in several hospitals and kindred institutions. The committee has no hesitancy in saying that, in so far as the dietary is concerned, it is healthful and sufficiently varied.

In the year 1903, and at the time when Doctor White was the superintendent of the hospital, the Department of Agriculture made a nutrition investigation at the Government Hospital for the Insane and gathered statistics during the course of such investigation. The committee quotes from the report of W. O. Atwater, chief of nutrition investigations of the Department of Agriculture, as follows:

"So far as can be judged from the results of these studies, as compared with similar data obtained elsewhere, the dietetic management of the institution was very satisfactory. Opportunities for improvement were observed, but these have to do with details rather than with the system as a whole. The diet was varied and attractive and certainly abundant. On the whole, the waste was larger than seems necessary, which would partially account for the fact that the cost of the diet was higher than would appear needful on theoretical grounds and higher than that of a similar det in other institutions. * * The studies made during the past year have given a tolerably clear idea of the existing conditions, and it is regarded as especially fortunate that during the present year it will be possible to make the attempt to improve the cordial cooperation of Dr. W. A. White, the present head of the institution."

Most of the supplies of the institution are purchased after bids duly advertised for, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and annual contracts are usually entered into. The Secretary of the Interior appoints a board to open bids, examine samples, and recommend awards. This board at present consists of the superintendent of the hospital as chalrman; Mr. William B. Acker, the chief of the miscellaneous division of the Interior Department; Judge Parker, of the General Land Office; Mr. Rapp, of the Secretary's office, and Mr. A. E. Offutt, who is the general purchasing agent for the hospital. Mr. Offutt was appointed by Doctor Richardson, the predecessor of the present superintendent, and has held the position continuously for six years. It is his duty to receive, a short time before the close of each fiscal year, from the heads of the various departments of the institution, such as the electrician, the engineer, the dry goods storekeeper, the grocery storekeeper, the pharmacist, and the farm steward, a list of the probable requirements for the ensuing fiscal year. These are properly classified and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior. Advertisements are inserted in the usual manner in some of the leading papers of the country, inviting bids for the items. Besides the articles that can be purchased in this way, the Secretary of the Interior permits the purchase of certain articles, mainly eggs, vegetables, fresh fish, fruits, and oleomargarine, in the open market.

In making the purchase above referred to, whether under the contracts made by the Secretary of the Interior with the several dealers or in purchasing goods in the open market, the purchasing agent is responsible.

The testimony that has been offered in regard to these food supplies shows that the food purchased is of a good quality and is obtained with or in purchasing goods in the open market, the purchasing agent is responsible.

The testimony that has been offered in regard to these food supplies shows that the food purchased is of a good quality and is obtained with proper consideration for the health of the inhabitants of the hospital, combined with the economical administration of the institution, although some testimony was introduced tending to show that at times the average in quality had not been what it should have been.

In the course of its examination the committee visited the kitchens of the institution, and believes that the food is of sufficient quantity and, notwithstanding the complaints that have been made as to improper preparation, is generally of good quality and fittingly prepared.

The committee believes that by the placing of steam tables in all of the dining rooms and building at least one, if not two, additional kitchens, the facilities would be such that the preparation of the food and its prompt service might be improved, and would recommend that when specific improvements of this character are asked for by the superintendent of the hospital such recommendation be adopted and proper provision made. provision made.

provision made.

Seventh. As to the buildings and farm.—There are the following departments in the hospital in connection with the care and treatment of patients:

The women's department, consisting of 11 buildings (oaks D and E being one building), with 646 patients and 83 employees, the number of patients in each building varying from 10 to 140, depending, of course, upon the size of the buildings.

The Howard Hall department, consisting of 5 buildings, with 354 patients and 45 employees.

The Richardson group department, consisting of 4 buildings, containing 371 patients and 42 employees.

The receiving department, consisting of 7 buildings (Allison D¹ and D² being one building), with 664 patients and 56 employees.

The receiving department, consisting of 2 buildings and having 447 patients and 74 employees.

The full list of these several departments and the buildings they contain, with the number of patients and employees in each of the wards, is set forth on page 520 in the testimony of Doctor Clark.

In addition to the buildings mentioned, the building or buildings designated as the east side, consisting of 13 or 14 wards, were unoccupied and therefore omitted from the testimony. The committee has been informed, however, that the wards of the east side, with a few exceptions, are now occupied by patients, as a are the buildings Dix 1 and Dix 2, also omitted from the testimony.

The buildings that have been most recently erected are in excellent condition, and are suitable for the purposes for which they were built. They were entirely completed just after the present superintendent assumed charge, appropriations having been granted by Congress and the buildings having been near completion at that time.

The land owned by the Government and occupied by the hospital consists of a plot of about 350 acres, upon which all of the buildings above mentioned are situated, and besides this property there is owned the Stevens farm, of about 60 acres, which is only a short distance from the hospital, and also the Godding Croft farm, grass. All told, there are about 122 acres that are under present cultivation. The corn and garden truck are used by the hospital, and the rest of the farm is used for the pasture of the cows which are kept there, the milk from them being used in the hospital.

It does not seem to the committee that there is a sufficient utilization of the farm for the purposes of giving outdoor employment to the patients, but the committee entirely appreciates that this would be impossible with the present buildings now on the farm, as before more patients than are now used in the work on the farm could work there it would be necessary for an additional dormitory to be built, and the committee believes that this would be a useful adjunct to the general work of the institution.

than are now used in the work on the farm could work there it would be necessary for an additional dormitory to be built, and the committee believes that this would be a useful adjunct to the general work of the institution.

The building established for the use of the female nurses is admirable. It would unquestionably add greatly to the comfort of the male attendants and nurses if a similar building could be erected for their use, and the committee is informed that such a place is being established by the superintendent. There are other buildings on the hospital grounds used for the administration department, the engineer's department, barns, stables, etc.

Eighth. As to employment of patients.—Every witness who was questioned upon the subject, including the superintendent and the several members of the medical staff and all the superintendents from other institutions, said that it was an excellent thing for patients if they could be induced to work in any capacity. This is done in the Government Hospital for the Insane wherever it is feasible, and the patients generally are urged to work. It would not be possible nor even desirable to force patients to work, but no argument seems to be needed as to the beneficial results that ensue to the patients who have certain duties to perform. For this reason a considerable number of the patients are employed in or about the grounds and wards, in the barns, dining rooms, kitchens, laundry, sewing rooms, and on the farm. Altogether, there are something like 600 patients so employed. From the testimony of superintendents of other institutions this is not as large a proportion as are employed in some of the other institutions but different conditions seem to exist here. In the first place, there are in the institution about 700 people over 60 years of age, and it would be, in the oppinion of the physicians, impossible to get work out of those people. Besides that, something like 250 to 300 people are bedridden. And many of the old soldiers and sailors confined in the hosp

The testimony in regard to this particular inclosure was given by Dr. J. T. Simpson, and appears on page 1497 of the record. He said that was a little park that he made himself; that with the help of some of the patients and employees he laid it out, graveled the walks, planted trees and shrubs, put out plants, and tried to beautify it as much as possible. It was entirely detached from the rest of the grounds. The patients were more or less confined to these limits, because the patients that were under his control were largely old men who would wander away. In that way the patients were, as a rule, not allowed a parole of the entire hospital grounds. They were confined within this space, and an ordinary parole meant inside of that inclosure. This was in the case where a greater confinement was necessary than with the men who were especially trustworthy and were allowed the privilege of going outside of the inclosure and going down by the river and around into other portions of the grounds. The buildings take up a good deal of the ground. There is a group of buildings, the Allison group, and although they take considerable space there is a fair amount of recreation ground left. There are some summerhouses there, and on a small scale it is laid out like a park.

Doctor Hummer testified as to the so-called "bull pen" and said that contain of the patients there are taken outside and there the contains of the patients there are taken outside and there the contains of the patients there are taken outside and there the contains of the patients there are taken outside and the contains of the patients there are taken outside and the contains the contains of the patients.

they take considerable space there is a fair amount of recreation ground left. There are some summerhouses there, and on a small scale it is laid out like a park.

Doctor Hummer testified as to the so-called "bull pen" and said that certain of the patients there are taken outside and through the entire hospital grounds in charge of attendants every day.

Tenth. As to the dual management.—Some testimony was taken in regard to the propriety of institutions similar to that of the Government Hospital for the Insane having a dual head, one for the medical care of the institution and the other for the care of the purchase of supplies and the management of buildings, etc. The committee is confident that this plan is one that is not feasible. The superintendent one of the institutions testified that the mere question of food supplies should be under the immediate control of the medical superintendent, and stated that nothing was more important in the care of persons either mentally or physically ill than the question of their diet.

The overwhelming preponderance of the evidence is in favor of the single and not the dual management of such institutions.

Eleventh. As to classification of patients.—Since Doctor White has been superintendent the question of the proper segregation of patients has been carried to as great an extent as seems to be possible with the present buildings, and is being continued as rapidly as practicable. Epileptic patients have been separated from others as far as is possible; the tubercular patients have been entirely separated from other patients; paretics have been accumulated in separate wards.

It must be borne in mind that in this particular institution there are 500 criminal insane. They are confined in one building, commonly known as "Howard Hall." The committee believes that it would be of very great advantage to the institution for Congress to provide for the founding of a hospital for the criminal insane, so that that class of patients could be taken entirely away from the hospital.

paid directly to the wife or dependent relatives of the soldier, or to the soldier himself if he had no wife or dependent relatives, provided he was mentally competent to sign the pension voucher, in which case the superintendent certified that fact to the Pension Bureau. In the event that the pensioner did not have dependent relatives and was not competent to sign the voucher, the pension money remained in the hands of the Pension Bureau until a guardian was appointed by the court, when the money was paid over to such guardian.

The act of August 7, 1882, however, provided that such pension moneys, in cases where the inmate had neither wife nor dependent relatives, should be made payable to the superintendent of the hospital for the general purposes of the hospital, and the pensioner derived no special benefit therefrom.

Notwithstanding the act of 1882 last above referred to, and for some time after the passage thereof and before the incumbency of Doctor White, many of the immates who had no wives or dependent relatives, and were able to sign the pension vouchers as before stated, received their pensions, but at some subsequent period not disclosed by the testimony all of these moneys were paid over to the superintendent for the purposes of the hospital, in accordance with the provisions of that act. When Doctor White became superintendent he found some $30,000, which had accumulated under the provisions of the act of 1882, and, at the request of the Commissioner, and he in turn deposited such sum in the Treasury; but up to the present time no use whatever has been made of this money.

In some of these cases it was found that the soldiers at the time of their admission to the hospital were not in receipt of pensions, although they were properly entitled thereto. In those cases it was necessary, under the law, for a guardian or committee of the patient to be appointed by the court, in order that proper application for pension could be made to the Pension Bureau, but as the patient was received upon the order o were subsequently granted by the Pension Bureau, the same were collected, and in every case, upon order of the court, disbursed by such committees.

Congress passed another act on February 20, 1905 (which is printed in full at page 1743 of the RECORD). This act provides, among other things, that the pensions of all inmates of the hospital shall be paid to the superintendent, to be disbursed by him under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and such regulations have been accordingly made by the Secretary of the Interior and will be found at page 1744. These regulations direct the superintendent to receive the pension of the inmate as agent and use the same, first, for the benefit of the pensioner; second, for the benefit of relatives entitled under the law; and third, to reimburse the hospital for the pensioner's board and maintenance. The superintendent is also directed by the regulations to reserve from each pension an amount, not to exceed one-sixth thereof, to be expended in the purchase of such articles as may be required for the pensioner's welfare and which are not provided from the regular hospital funds or otherwise for the pensioner's benefit, and to charge the remainder, after payment therefrom for the benefit of relatives, if any, as provided in such regulations, with the pensioner's board and maintenance in the hospital, and to place any balance then remaining to the pensioner's credit on the books of the hospital; to pay any unexpended balance of pension money reserved for the pensioner's benefit and any pension money to his credit on the books of the hospital, in the event of the pensioner's discharge from the hospital, to the pensioner is returned to a branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to the treasurer of such branch. In the event of the pensioner's death while an inmate of the hospital the superintendent is directed to pay the same to his widow, or, if there be no widow to his minor children, or, if there be no widow or minor children entitled must be turned over to the superintendent, as agent, to be used by him as hereinbefore stated.

While it would seem to the committee that the act of 1882, providing for the payment of pensions to the superintendent for the purposes of the hospital, was not reasonable or fair to the patient, it does not deem it within the scope of its duties to criticise the law.

But it is the opinion of the committee that the act of February 30, 1905, which, presumably, was passed to cure whatever of injustice existed under the act of 1882, is a reasonable solution of the question.

The pensioner now receives one-sixth of his pension money for the purpose of providing himself with such necessities as the hospital is not able to give him; a certain portion, not to exceed $220 per year, is used for his board and maintenance at the hospital, and the balance placed to his credit, or, if he has no dependent or nondependent relatives, after the deduction of the amount of his board the entire amount of such balance is placed to his credit, and upon his discharge is paid over to him or his guardian. If the pensioner dies while an inmate of the hospital the amount standing to his credit is turned over to his widow or minor children, and, if there he no widow or minor children, to the hospital.

The committee believes that such disposition of pension money is fair, and that there is no necessity for recommending any changes in the law.

Thirteenth. Per capita cost.—In the course of the investigation with the reason of the property of the law. Thirteenth. Per capita cost.—In the course of the investigation there was more or less testimony taken from the officials connected with the Government Hospital for the Insane, the superintendents of other similar institutions, and others, as to the question of per capita cost, and it would appear from the schedules filed that such cost per capita in the government hospital was greater than that in similar institutions in various States. This is not universally so, as will be seen by the testimony of the superintendent, on page 920, where it appears that three institutions which he mentions cost more per capita than the government hospital. It should be said in this connection that the per capita cost of the Government Hospital for the Insane for the last twenty years has been at least $220 a year. During a short period of those twenty years the per capita cost was $225, as shown by the appropriations made by Congress for the institution.

Previous to the appointment of Doctor White as superintendent it was frequently necessary to make an appropriation in the general deficiency bill for deficiency in the maintenance of the hospital. This has not been the case since Doctor White's appointment, notwithstanding 15 additional buildings have since been opened, occupied, and maintained. As a matter of fact, at this time there are 18 more wards in commission than before he took charge of the institution. It is true that the number of people employed has been practically unchanged, but many of the salaries of the attendants and the other employees of the hospital have been raised.

Entirely apart from these facts, the population of the Government Hospital for the Insane is unique, and the character of the patients makes it practically impossible to make an accurate comparison with institutions for the care of the insane elsewhere. In the first place, something like 700 of the patients in the institution are more than 60 years of age; more than 250 of the patients are bedridden.

The men who have served in the military establishment of the country are usually unwilling to perform any voluntary labor. Generally speaking, they believe that they are entitled to a life of entire case and freedom from work, as they would be were they in entire possession of their mental faculties and inmates of a Soldiers' Home. Then, too, the white people who go to the institution from the District of Columbia are averse to performing anything in the nature of manual labor, as they are inclined to think that such labor should be performed by the colored inhabitants of the institution of an about institution and beneficial to the patients if additional lands could be obtained.

Fourteenth. As to the creation of a lunacy commission.—The evidence shows that there exists in many States a lunacy commission, whose duty it is, among other things, to make inspection of the various hospitals for the insane under its supervision.

The committee is of the opinion that, in case there were several government hospitals for the lunsane, it would be the part of wisdom for Congress to make legislation for the creation of a lunacy commission so that these several institutions could be conducted along the same lines, but in the case of the Government Hospital for the Insane there would seem to be no need for such a commission.

The board of visitors, whose duties are prescribed by statute, so far as the question of inspection is concerned, performs the work of a lunacy commission, and the committee believes that that was the object of the statute. The superintendent is, of course, under the control of the Secretary of the Interior.

The statute provides that the board of visitors, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, "may make any needry by-laws for the government of themselves, and of the superintendent and his employees, and of the patients, not inconsistent with law; they shall visit the hospital at stated periods, and exercise so careful a supervision over its expenditures and general operations that the Government and community may have confidence in the correctness of its management, etc."

The committee can not conceive that anything would be gained by the appointment of a lunacy commission, but, on the other hand, there would be incurred, in case of such appointment, the expenses incident thereto.

There was testimony from one of the witnesses that there should be the appointment of a lunacy commission, but, on the other hand, there would be incurred, in case of such appointment, the expenses incident thereto.

There was testimony from one of the witnesses that there should be a lunacy commission created for the hospital, but the witness stated that the reason for his opinion was that other institutions for the insane might hereafter be created in the District which could be placed under the supervision of this commission, if appointed.

The superintendents of the various state institutions for the insane who were examined on this point sated that, although there was great necessity for a lunacy commission in their respective States, they could see no reason for establishing such a commission for the purpose of supervising control over one particular institution.

Fifteenth. As to the commitment of patients.—A great deal of time has been given to the question of the authority for and method of commitment of indigent patients from the District of Columbia to the hospital, and after a careful examination of the law in connection therewith the committee has no hesitancy in saying that the law as it now stands on that subject is misleading, conflicting, and ambiguous.

In addition to the Revised Statutes hereinbefore referred to, at page 1786 of the record and following, the committee found that the deficiency appropriation act of June 30, 1903, provided that "hereafter proceedings by the Commissioners of the District to commit indigent insane persons and insane persons with homicidal or dangerous tendencies shall be in the equity court of the said District and shall be in conformity with the law in force in the said District and shall be in conformity with the law in force in the said District and shall be in conformity with the law in force in the said District and shall be in conformity with the law in force in the said District and shall be in conformity with the law in force in the said District and shall be in conformity with the law in force in the said District and s

Also, in the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, amended to and including March 3, 1905, the committee found a provision, section 115a, in connection with lunacy proceedings, as follows:

"Sec. 115a. Lunacy proceedings.—All writs de lunatico inquirendo shall issue from said equity court, and the justice holding said court shall preside at all inquisitions of lunacy, and when necessary may use a jury from either the circuit or criminal court, or may cause a special jury to be summoned for such inquisitions."

The committee also found a decision on the subject made by the supreme court of the District of Columbia February 16, 1885, and hereinafter more specifically set forth in the matter of William M. Bryant. (3 Mackey's Repts., 489.)

A considerable amount of testimony was heard as to the method of the commitment of inmates of the soldiers' homes to the Government Hospital for the Insane, as provided by statute—that is to say, upon the written order of the apresident of the Board of Managers of said homes to the superintendent of the hospital. The form of such order will be found contained in the record at page 1205.

Objections were made by several of the witnesses to this method of commitment from the home on the ground that great injustice might be done to some of the old soldiers, and, in fact, they alleged that, in certain cases, inmates from the homes had been sent to the hospital, upon the order as aforesaid, who were in fact sane.

As to the legality of this method of commitment there can be no doubt, in view of the decision in the case of Bryant, before mentioned. By that decision the court held that these commitments were proper; that persons in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps, or, perhaps, even in the Revenue-Cutter Service, were already under control; and that "a soldier can be made to go into the hospital for medical treatment, upon the judgment of his superior officers, and they can order him to this asylum if they think that he ought to go there, and in that case the officer's action would be due process of law."

The committee also heard some testimony to the effect that the courts had decided that this manner of commitment was illegal in all cases where the term of enlistment of a social and, under control of the Secretary of War, or the Sec bospital can not legally detain them after such time unless they shall be duly committed thereto by "due process of law," which in the present case means an inquisition before a jury into a patient's mental condition.

"It has also been held that the transfer of an immate of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Government Hospital for the Insane upon the order of the board of managers of said home did not constitute due process of law and was therefore illegal. An appeal has been taken by the district attorney from the foregoing decisions, and the cases are still pending."

As to the alleged injustice or impropriety of such commitments, the committee begs to call attention to the fact that the superintendent of the hospital is directed to receive these patients "until cured." In other words, it is mandatory upon the superintendent to return these patients when cured to their respective soldiers homes. The testimory also shows that this has been done in many cases, and the committee is of the opinion that there is no desire on the part of the superintendent to retain these patients in the hospital after they are cured. Indeed, the testimony shows that, in certain cases where criminals alleged to be insane have been sent to the hospital from federal and military prisons and were found by the physicians to be feigning insanity in order to escape the hardships of such prisons, they were sent back by the superintendent.

As an illustration, Dr. L. H. Taylor, formerly a medical interne at the Government Hospital for the Insane, testified:

"I can refer you to a case that happened. There was a prisoner over there named Bromley, I think, who had committed some offense in the Philippines or one of the tropical possessions. He had murdered somebody, and he was sent to Fort Leavenworth as a life-sentence man, if I am not mistaken. * * We all knew he was a malingerer there, and finally we sent him back to Leavenworth. He was very glad to go back, because he thought he was going to get a pardon. He had n lished by an inquiry through a jury; that the sections of the Revised son the hospital without clied of the provided of o dents of the District, usually relatives of the alleged insane person, alleging the insanity of the person; that they believe him to be of unsound mind, incapable of managing his affairs, and a fit subject for detention and treatment at the Government Hospital for the Insane; the length of time he has been in such condition; that he is not fit to be at large; that if he be permitted to remain at liberty in said District the rights of persons and of property therein will be jeopardized, the preservation of the public peace imperiled, and the commission of crime rendered probable; that they believe that he is not the possessor of any lands and tenements, and that he is indigent and unable to pay for his care and treatment at said hospital.

This affidavit is made upon a blank furnished by and filed with the sanitary officer in the Metropolitan police department, and a copy of the form thereof is annexed hereto and marked "A."

Another affidavit is furnished by and filed with said officer, made by two physicians, stating that they, being qualified to make the affidavit as provided by law, certify that they have made an examination of the mental condition of the person said to be of unsound mind, and that in their judgment the said person is of unsound mind and should not be allowed to remain at liberty unrestrained, and that said person is a fit subject for treatment on account of his mental condition. A copy of the form of such affidavit is annexed hereto and marked "B."

A certificate furnished by said officer is then made out by the said and should not be allowed to remain at liberty unrestrained, and that said person is a fit subject for treatment on account of his mental condition. A copy of the form of such affidavit is annexed hereto and marked "B."

A certificate furnished by said officer is then made out by the said physicians, stating that they, after a personal examination of the said person, find him to be insane, which certificate gives the history of the case as far as the physicians have been able to obtain the same. Such certificate is filed with said officer, who thereafter files the same with the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane at the time of the admission of the said insane person to the hospital. The person so found to be of unsound mind is brought to the hospital either by his 'relatives or friends or by the superintendent of the Metropolitan police or one of the officers thereof. A copy of the form of said certificate is annexed hereto and marked "C."

The papers above mentioned, to wit, A, B, and C, are then handed to the Commissioners of the District, and the said commissioners then prepare a form of temporary commitment addressed to the superintendent of his mental condition according to law. A copy of such form of temporary commitment is hereto annexed and marked "D."

Within thirty days after such temporary commitment the person so committed is brought before the supreme court of the District and a jury, upon the petition of the commissioners accompanied by the papers aforesaid (the said commissioners being represented by the corporation counsel), and the question as to the sanity or insanity of the said person decided.

If the said person be declared insane by said court and jury the Commissioners of the District, being informed thereof, fill out another form (the permanent commitment), stating that the records of the supreme court show that a jury, lawfully impaneled and presided over by one of the justices of said court, according to law, has declared the said person to be of unsound mind and are again used, but the patient is not brought into court, in view of the fact that he was not discharged as "cured" and was still on the court dockets as an insane person.

Arrest of insane persons.—This report has already set forth the act of 1904, granting authority to the major and superintendent or any member of the Metropolitan police of the District to apprehend and detain, without warrant, any insane person or persons of unsound mind "found on any street, avenue, alley, or other public highway, or found in any public building or other public place within the District of Columbia."

The officer making the arrest is required to make an affidavit, the form of which is also provided by and filed with the sanitary officer aforesaid, a copy whereof is hereto annexed and marked "G." Such form of affidavit states that, from what the officer knows and has seen of such person, he believes him to be of unsound mind, incapable of taking care of himself or his property, and that if permitted to remain at large or go unrestrained in the District the rights of persons and property will be jeopardized or the preservation of public peace imperiled and the commission of crime rendered probable.

In addition to this affidavit the affidavit and certificate of two physicians must be made and filed, and the forms B and C aforesaid are used for that purpose, and the same method of temporary commitment and subsequent proceedings for permanent commitment or discharge of the alleged insane person is followed as in the case where application is made by a friend or relative.

The Commissioners of the District, after the temporary commitment, employ a physician to visit the patient and examine his mental condition, and this physician gives testimony in court at the time of the trial.

Dr. Presley C. Hunt, a witness called before the committee, for some trial.

Dr. Presley C. Hunt, a witness called before the committee, for some time has been making such examinations, and the committee quotes from his testimony, at page 623 of the record, as follows:

"Before the case comes to trial, which under the law has to be within thirty days, I examine that case, generally a day or two days after the trial comes on. I am allowed to look over the first examination paper made by the different surgeons, and then I examine the man myself to find out his mental condition, and I testify in court to such condition after the police surgeons have testified. If, in my opinion, the case has sufficiently recovered to be discharged, the jury, as a rule, takes my opinion and discharges the patient. Last week, for instance, there were two cases that were certified " that were discharged by order of the court on my testimony."

The Commissioners of the District, therefore, are the only authority for committing civilians to the hospital, and the committee is unable to see just what might happen if the said commissioners refused to commit a person, especially after a trial before the court and jury as aforesaid.

There is not before the committee evidence of any injustice having been done to anybody by reason of this method of commitment, but it believes that the methods thus stated, even if they be considered the only proper construction of the statutes, are unduly cumbersome, and that the procedure in these lunacy cases might be improved with beneficial results to all concerned.

The whole law as to the question of commitment of patients and the method of procedure in connection therewith should be changed, and a statute should be enacted in lieu thereof which would be clear and explicit, defining the lunacy proceedings in as simple a manner as possible.

It might properly be argued that the power given to the Commissioners of the District to commit patients after the findings of the jury and the order of the court thereon is superfluous, and there might also be a fair objection to the method of having a jury trial to inquire into the sanity or insanity of the person temporarily committed in every case.

into the sanity or insanity of the person temporarily committed in every case.

For instance, in the case of a jury trial, where the jury finds that the person before it is insane the order of the judge presiding at such trial, upon such finding, might be sufficient for all purposes, and the patient committed upon such judge's order, thereby doing away with the necessity for a commitment by the commissioners.

And as to the objection to the jury trial in every case before commitment, it could be said that in some cases great hardship would ensue, both to the patient and his relatives. There is no doubt that in many cases the patient is undoubtedly and perhaps dangerously insane and the publicity attending these trials humiliating to a degree.

And again it might be said with propriety that the whole question of insanity is purely and absolutely a medical one, and that it would be eminently proper to have the question decided by medical men rather than by a jury of laymen.

In many of the States of the Union the method of commitment is more simple than in the District of Columbia, and there is no necessity or provision for jury trials in every case nor for the cumbersome methods here practiced.

In the event of the enactment of a new lunacy law for the District of Columbia which would eliminate the necessity of a jury trial, as before mentioned, a provision could be made therein giving the patient, or his relatives or friends, the right to demand a jury trial before commitment, after notice given to him that application is to be made for his commitment. Provided the patient has no friend or relative the power to request a jury trial might be given to some official of the District; for example, the Board of Charities.

It is the opinion of the committee that there is urgent necessity for a change in the lunacy law, and it therefore recommends that a new statute be enacted in place of what it considers the vague and conficting law on that subject at the present time.

The committee submits herewith the following c

CONCLUSIONS.

- 1. That Dr. William A. White is fully qualified to perform the duties of the position of superintendent.

 2. That the charges of mismanagement of the hospital and of abuse of patients have not been sustained by the evidence.

 3. That the physicians on the medical staff and consulting staff of the hospital are capable men and able to properly care for the needs of the patients.

 4. That the methods of restaints
- of the patients.

 4. That the methods of restraint now used at the hospital are proper, and that restraint is only resorted to in cases of actual necessity.

 5. That the attendants perform their work well and care for the patients in a proper manner; that there have been cases of harsh treatment on the part of some attendants, which, however, have invariably resulted in the summary dismissal of the guilty parties.

 6. That the dietary used at the hospital is of good quality, of proper variety, and the food is generally well prepared and cooked.

 7. That the hospital is a modern institution and is abreast of the times, and is making proper progress in the scientific work with which it has to do; that the buildings and equipment are equal and in many cases superior to those at other institutions.

 8. That the patients are employed in and about the hospital as far

- 8. That the patients are employed in and about the hospital as far as practicable, and that such employment of patients adds materially to their welfare.
- 9. That the so-called "bull pen" is a misnomer, and the group of buildings and inclosure so termed is properly arranged for the comfort of the patients.

- of the patients.

 10. That the management of the hospital should be under one head.

 11. That the superintendent has made a careful classification of the patients as far as practicable.

 12. That the law now existing relative to the collection and disbursement of pension money of patients, together with the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior in connection therewith, are just and equitable.

 13. That the per capita cost of the hospital as now fixed should not be reduced, in view of the peculiar conditions surrounding the hospital, which do not exist at other similar institutions.

 14. That there is no necessity for the creation of a lunacy commission in the District of Columbia.

 15. That the law relative to the commitment of patients should be repealed and a new law enacted.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

In view of the fact that the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane is authorized by statute to make such improvements as he may deem necessary out of the money appropriated for the support fund of the hospital and the pension money now in his hands not to the credit of the patients, and it appearing that he has been and is now engaged in making various improvements which have and will inure to the benefit of the patients, the committee can not see any reason for making recommendations except as follows:

1. That the statute should be amended so that the superintendent should be relieved of performing the duties of a disbursing officer of the hospital and should be given authority to appoint a disbursing officer to act under his direction.

2. That the statutes should be amended so as to make provision for the creation of a separate institution in the District of Columbia to care for the criminal insane patients now confined in the hospital.

3. That steam heaters to be used for the purpose of keeping the food hot after it leaves the kitchens should be installed in each dining room in the hospital.

in the hospital.

(4) That at least one and perhaps two new kitchens should be installed wherever it or they would be most convenient for the preparation of food served to patients and attendants.
(5) That the statutes relative to the commitment of patients should be repealed and a new lunacy law enacted.
(6) That the farm could be utilized to a greater advantage to the institution if additional dormitory facilities could be provided there.
Respectfully submitted.

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned members of the special committee appointed to make a full and complete investigation of the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane beg leave to submit the following report.

The investigation made by the committee took a very wide scope; and in making this report it is desired to call to the attention of the House the prominent facts which have been proven upon the following points of investigation:

1. Treatment of the inmates.
2. Food supplied to the inmates.
3. Number and character of attendants.
4. Manner of commitment of soldiers and sallors to the hospital.
5. Disposition of the pensions of the soldiers and sallors committed to the hospital.
6. Conduct of the superintendent and the officials under him; his powers.

powers.
7. Board of visitors.
8. The importance of a lunacy commission, or of some other method of inspection.
1. The treatment of the inmates of the hospital by the medical staff is, on the whole, humane; the medical treatment is abreast with the times; the most approved and advanced methods are resorted to, and the medical staff in that regard are highly recommended by the profession generally. Some mechanical restraint is used, and it is a question whether some of this could not be done away with if there were in the hospital a sufficient number of attendants. It seems to be the consensus of opinion among alienists that restraint should be reduced to the minimum.
It also appears that the medical staff of the hospital frown on and tion whether some of this could not be done away with if there were in the hospital a sufficient number of attendants. It seems to be the consensus of opinion among allenists that restraint should be reduced to the minimum.

It also appears that the medical staff of the hospital frown on and sternly forbid cruelty to patients by attendants; numerous cases of dismissals of attendants for this reason appear in evidence. But that attendants have treated patients cruelly, both by blows and neglect, is proved beyond doubt, no less than 40 witnesses having testified to specific instances of cruelty, and of these 40 witnesses, 26 of them were attendants and ex-attendants. That there have been numerous other cases of cruelty is most probable, and it must be remembered that these cases have occurred since the 1st day of October, 1903. A management under which such instances could happen, and under which they continue to happen, must be faulty. The fault is partly due to the fact, it seems to the undersigned, that there are not a sufficient number of attendants, 1 attendant being often left on the wards without help and without supervision. It is also true that there is a certain amount of callousness displayed both by physicians and attendants, as well as a want of sympathy with these unfortunate people. (See the evidence in the Gartrell case, to be found on pp. 1537–1573 of the printed record.)

2. As to the food which is supplied to the inmates of the hospital there is a conflict of evidence; but it seems to the undersigned that the great preponderance of the testimony is that the food is generally hadly prepared, badly served, and oftentimes is not of such a kind as to be fit for consumption, especially when the character of these people is taken into consideration. It appears that the food served from the general kitchen is cold and unpalatable, that it is sometimes insufficient, and sometimes not fit to eat. Forty-one witnesses testify to one or the other of these conditions, and these witnesses are for the most pa especially those so unfortunately placed, we can not admit the plea of poverty.

4. It has seemed to us that the manner of commitment of soldiers and sailors to the hospital is not in accord with those principles of law and justice which should be applied in cases involving the liberty and property of the citizens of this country. The law seems to provide that in the case of an enlisted soldier or sailor or of a retired soldier or sailor he can be committed to the hospital upon an order of the Secretary of War or of the Navy, as the case may be. It seems to us clear that these people should be entitled to a jury trial before they are deprived of their liberty.

But the case of the soldiers sent to the hospital from the different soldiers' homes is even worse. They are committed to the hospital upon the order of the president of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. No process of any kind is invoked. And from the evidence it appears that the president of the board acts upon the ipse dixit of the surgeons of the different homes. Surely a jury trial ought to be had in these cases, especially when it appears that men have been committed to the hospital who were not insane.

5. From the evidence it appears that besides the annual appropriation made for the support of the hospital a large amount of money is derived from the pensions of the soldiers and saliors committed there, and it does not appear that this money is spent for the benefit of the pensioners, but for the inmates of the hospital generally and for improvements to the grounds and buildings. (See pp. 1365, 1366 of the printed record.) We are at a loss to understand why, when the Government amply provides for the maintenance and care of the soldiers and saliors, the pensions of these men should be diverted from their use to the general use of the hospital. A law should be enacted providing that these pensioners should get the benefit of their pensions. It appears that there is now in the Treasury $130,000 to the credit of pensioners who are inmates of this hospital, and the superintendent contends that five-sixths of this amount can be spent for the general purposes of the hospital. Congress appropriates for the maintenance and support of these pensioners the sum of $220 per man per year. Some of the pensioners draw $96 per year and some of them more than this; so instead of $220 per year, the hospital is really spending $300 per year, and in some cases a larger sum, per man, and at the same time these pensioners are not getting the benefit of their pensions. From what we can learn, it is difficult to say how much is spent each year for the maintenance and support of this hospital.

6. It is desired to call attention to the very large powers exercised by the superintendent, who practically appoints every employee of the institution and fixes the salaries of these employees. We thiluk that the superintendent should employ those who hav which the items for the hospital should be see out in detail. The method of hum appropriations has long since been recognized as victous legisland, and no valid reason can be given for its continuance in this life in the continuance in this life is an overline of the continuance in this life is an overline of the continuance in this life is an overline of the continuance in this life is an overline of the continuance in this life is an overline of the purpose of showing to what extent the power of the superintendent of the purpose of showing to what extent the power of the superintendent of the laundry, where a large number of people are employed. He was reported on two occasions for an offense against the regulations. No investigation was ever made of these charges, and no excuse was given for the failure to investigate them, although it appears from the evidence taken by the committee that the charge was well founded and that the superintendent of the hospital could easily have ascertained the facts in the case.

7. The functions of the board of visitors are set forth in the statute, and doubtless when this institution was founded the board could adequately perform the duties assigned to them, but with the growth of the hospital it has been more and more impossible for the board of visitors to exercise that amount of supervision which it seems to us is necessary for the well-being and proper government of the hospital. The legal adviser of the board expressed the opinion (and that opinion has been for the board to inspect it, and, as a matter of fact, there are many wards into which the board of visitors do not go once in a year.

8. In this age inspection has become one of the most important agencies in the government of all institutions. There is, so far as we know, not a State whose hospitals are not subjected to inspection by competent boards appointed for the purpose. And this inspection is not performed by those directly connected with the hospital, but by disinterested and impartial men, whose duty it

4 Number not given.

As compared with this statement, the Government Hospital for the Insane had about 2,500 patients, and the ratio of attendants to patients is 1 to 8.

There can be no doubt, from these figures, that the Government Hospital for the Insane has a greater number of attendants, in proportion to the patients, than has any other hospital mentioned in the investigation.

I also desire to insert in the RECORD for the information of the House a statement taken from the testimony showing the difference between the hours of service of attendants at the Government Hospital for the Insane and those at other hospitals.

Government Hospital for the Insane, eleven hours.
Columbus State Hospital, Columbus, Ohio (testimony does not give number of hours, but is to the effect that the hours are longer than they are at the Government Hospital for the In-Manhattan State Hospital, New York, thirteen hours.

Central Islip State Hospital, thirteen hours.
All New York hospitals, thirteen hours.
Massillon State Hospital, Massillon, Ohio (testimony does not give number of hours, but is to the effect that the hours are longer than they are at the Government Hospital for the In-

Morris Plains State Hospital, Morris Plains, N. J., fifteen hours

This comparison shows beyond question that the attendants at the Government Hospital for the Insane are better treated, so far as hours of service are concerned, than the attendants at other hospitals for the insane.

The conclusions of the gentleman seem to have been arrived at not after a careful and impartial reading of the testimony, not after a calm judgment after considering all the facts pro and con in the case, not from a fair standard of comparison of the character of the testimony of all of the witnesses, but from that of irresponsible persons and discharged employees of the institution, and of certain other persons who were not allowed free access to the private records of patients at the hospital for the purpose of using it in their business

The gentleman seems to be keenly disappointed because the committee's report and the views of the minority did not sustain the charges made against the hospital and its superintendent.

The argument of the gentleman is answered by the report of the committee on the investigation and the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia, both of which I have in-serted as part of my remarks. These reports give facts, references, and exhibits which can leave no doubt in the mind of any unprejudiced man as to the wisdom of passing legislation to correct the abuses which have been caused by the conflicting laws in regard to the commitment of patients to the Government Hospital for the Insane.

In regard to the bill H. R. 12898, which I introduced, to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes, which bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Co-lumbia, I beg to insert in the Record a copy of the bill, together with the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which report contains a statement of the reasons why the insanity law as it now exists should be modified.

[H. R. 12898. Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

A bill to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane of insane persons residing in the District of Columbia, and for admission to said hospital of nonresident insane persons found in said District, shall be commenced by petition presented in open court to the justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia holding a special term for orphans? court business, stating the facts necessary for admission to said hospital, as heretofore provided by law, such petition to be signed and sworn to by some responsible resident of the District of Columbia; but such petition shall not be filed until the court shall be satisfied as to the responsibility and residence of the person signing and swearing to the same and shall make and enter an order directing the filing of such petition. SEC. 2. That the order of such court directing the filing of the petition shall fix a time for the hearing, of such application and shall require copies thereof to be served on the alleged lunatic and on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia at least one day preceding the time fixed for such hearing, and a copy of such order, duly authentication of the control of the contro gent, or shall not have more than enough property to support his haimly dependent upon him for support, the expenses of his board and maintenance in the hospital shall be paid by the District of Columbia, as now provided by law.

SEC. 5. That the order of the court on the hearing of the application on the perition and the evidence shall be made without an inquisition by jury, and all the proceedings under the petition shall be entered in the minutes of the court: Provided, however, That the justice to whom application is made may, if no demand is made for a hearing, proceed forthwith to determine the question of insanity, and if satisfied that the alleged insane person is insane may immediately issue an order for commitment to the Government Hospital for the Insane. And provided further, That, upon demand of any relative or near friend in behalf of such alleged insane person, the judge shall, or he may upon his own motion, issue an order directing the hearing of such application before him at a time not more than five days from the date of such order, which shall be served upon the persons upon whom the petition is hereinbefore directed to be served, and upon such other person as the justice, in his discretion, may name, and upon such other person as the justice shall hear the testimony introduced by the parties and examine the alleged insane person, if deemed advisable, in or out of court, and render a decision in writing as to such person's insanity. If it be determined that such person is insane, the justice shall forthwith issue an order committing him to the Government Hospital for the Insane: And provided further, That the court may, in its discretion, call a jury to determine the question of insanity: And provided further. That if a person ordered to be committed pursuant to the provisions of this act, or any relative or friend in his behalf, is dissatished with the final order of a justice committing him, he may, within ten days after the making of such order, appeal therefrom to a justice of the suprem after a hearing, with provisions made therein for such temporary care or confinement of the alleged insane person as may be deemed necessary. Sec. 6. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, so soon as practicable, to return to their places of residence or to their friends all indigent insane persons not residing in the District of Columbia at the time they become insane who are now or hereafter may be detailed in the Government Hospital for the Insane, or who shall be committed to the said hospital to be temporarily cared for, and all necessary expenses incurred by the commissioners in ascertaining the locality where such persons or their friends belong and in returning them to such locality shall be defrayed by the District of Columbia.

of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That all provisions of law inconsistent with this act be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

[House of Representatives. Report No. 1425. Sixtleth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12898) to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass when amended as follows:

Strike out of page 1, line 9, the words "a special term for orphans' court business" and insert in lieu thereof the word "probate."

Strike out of page 1, line 12, the word "some" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at least three," and change the word "resident," in the same line, to the plural.

Strike out of page 2, line 19, the words "and shall" and insert in lieu thereof the words "when it shall."

Strike out of page 2, line 19, the words "or more."

Strike out of page 2, line 19, the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Strike out of page 3, lines 18, 19, and 20, the words "The request for admission to said hospital shall be made within five days after the entry of the order of the court."

Insert in page 5, line 17, after the word "discretion," the words "or upon demand of any relative or near friend, in behalf of such alleged insane person, shall."

Insert in page 5, line 18, after the word "insanity," the words "within five days of the date of such order."

Strike out of page 7, line 18, after the word "insanity," the words "within five days of the date of such order."

The bill provides a simple but positive method of commitment of patients to the Government Hospital for the Insane.

An act to authorize the apprehension and detention of insane persons in the District of Columbia, and providing for their temporary commitment in the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That any member of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, or any other officer in said District authorized to make arrests, is hereby authorized and empowered to apprehend and detain, without warrant, any insane person or person of unsound mind found on any street, avenue, alley, or other public highway, or found in any public building or other public place within the District of Columbia; and it shall be the duty of the policeman or officer so apprehending or detaining any such person to immediately file his affidavit with the major and superintendent of said Metropolitan police that he believes said person to be insane or of unsound mind, incapable of taking care of himself or herself or his or her property, and if permitted to remain at large or to go unrestrained in the District of Columbia the rights of persons and of property will be jeopardized or the preservation of the public peace imperfled and the commission of crime rendered probable: Provided, however, That it shall be the duty of the major and superintendent of the said Metropolitan police to forthwith notify the husband or wife or some near relative or friend of the person so apprehended and detained whose address may be known to the said major and superintendent or whose address can by reasonable inquiry be ascertained by him.

Sec. 2. That the major and superintendent of said Metropolitan police is hereby authorized to order the apprehension and detention, without warrant, of any indigent person alleged to be insane or of unsound mind or any alleged insane person alleged to be insane or of unsound mind, the length of time they have known such person, that they believe such person is not fit to be at large or to go unrestrained, and if such person is permitted to remain at liberty in the piscound mind, t

SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may authorize the temporary commitment of any of the above-mentioned insane persons or persons of unsound mind so apprehended and detained as provided in sections I and 2 of this act (for a period of time not exceeding thirty days) in any other hospital in said District which, in the judgment of the health officer of said District, is properly constructed and equipped for the reception and care of such persons, and the official in charge of which, for the time being, is willing to receive such persons, pending the temporary commitment or the formal commitment of such persons, as provided by law, to the Government Hospital for the Insane or to any other hospital or insane asylum; or any stuch alleged insane person or person of unsound mind apprehended under sections I and 2 of this act may be detained in any police station or house of detention in said District until formally committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane or any other hospital or insane asylum; and such persons may be detained in any police station or house of detention in said District until formally committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane or any other hospital or asylum; and such persons may be detained in any police station or house of detention in said District until formally committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane or any other hospital or asylum; and for he Insane or to any other hospital or asylum; Provided, however, That if, pending the formal roommitment of such alleged insane person or person of unsound mind to the Government Hospital for the Insane or to any other hospital or asylum; he seem the second of the second of

The following is an extract from the act mentioned in line 4 of page 6 of the bill:

[Public-No. 206.]

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia."

Be it enacted, etc., That the following amendments are hereby made to an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901.

SEC. 115a. Lunacy proceedings.—All writs de lunatico inquirendo shall issue from said equity court, and the justice holding said court shall preside at all inquisitions of lunacy, and, when necessary, may use a jury from either the circuit or criminal court, or may cause a special jury to be summoned for such inquisitions. *

One of the most salient changes provided in this bill, in the method of committing persons to the hospital, is the doing away of jury trials, except when demanded by the patient or some one representing him. The following is an extract from the Report of the Superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane to the Secretary of the Interior for 1905:

Lunacy legislation.—Up to a few months ago the method of procedure in the commitment of insane persons from the District was to try them before a marshal's jury. In regard to this practice I would call attention to the following quotation from the last annual report of the hospital:

before a marshal spars. In regard this practice I would can attraction to the following quotation from the last annual report of the hospital:

"More specific legislation, particularly as to the commitment of the insane from the District, is to be desired. This should be along lines already followed out in many of the States, and, on general principles, fairly well established. The most crying defect in the method now in vogue is the necessity of trying each case in open court. There is absolutely no reason or necessity for this, and it can only have the effect of humiliating both the patient and the patient's relatives. It is time that in this community, at least, insanity should be appreciated for what it is—a form of illness—and legal requirements that place a sick man on the same level as a common criminal have no place in an enlightened community."

As a partial correction of the defects of commitment by marshal's jury. Congress passed an act last winter, which was approved February 23, 1905 (see appendix, Exhibit B), which provides that the trial of lunacy cases shall be presided over by a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. This is a considerable improvement over the old method, as some dignity is given to the proceedings, which are conducted in an orderly and decent manner. This same act also provides for the restoration of the civil rights of the patients who have been discharged from the hospital as recovered, directing that the court, upon certification from the superintendent that the patient has been so discharged, may proceed immediately to issue an order restoring said patients to their former legal status. A further improvement in lunacy conditions was also made by the passage of an act approved April 27, 1905 (see appendix, Exhibit C), which provides for the temporary detention in the hospital for a period not to exceed thirty days of an alleged insane person pending issuing by the proper authorities of a formal commitment. Previous to the passage of this act insane persons had to be kept in local lockups, associated with all sorts of undesirable persons, and frequently without the care which their condition called for.

detention in the hospital for a period not to exceed thirty days of an alleged insane person pending issuing by the proper authorities of a formal color be kept in local lockups, associated with all sorts of undestrable persons, and frequently without the care which their condition and the color of the

To revert to the question as to the manner of commitment of indigent patients from the District of Columbia, it might be well, perhaps, to dilate upon the methods now in practice, and the law relating thereto, from the beginning of the hospital up to the present time.

Prior to February 16, 1885, commitments were usually made by the Secretary of the Interior upon the statements of two physicians and a relative or friend of the alleged lunatic, presumably in accordance with the statutes at that time in force, until one Bryant, a patient at the hospital, sued out a writ of habeas corpus, demanding his release upon the ground that he was committed without due process of law.

On the date last above mentioned the supreme court of the District of Columbia decided in that case that Bryant was committed without due process of law, and it therefore ordered his discharge from the hospital, declaring, among other things, that the whole question of commitment was regulated by the Maryland statute of 1785, chapter 27, section 6, providing that the insanity of a person should in all cases be established by an inquiry through a jury; that the sections of the Revised Statutes as they then existed did not contemplate compulsory seclusion in the hospital without due process of law, and that if they meant anything else they would be unconstitutional.

Thereafter all proceedings in lunacy were had before a marshal's jury, in accordance with the Bryant decision and the law of Maryland, until January 31, 1899, when Congress passed an act (now section 8425 of the Revised Statutes as amended) doing away with the necessity of the marshal's jury and directing the proceedings to be brought before one of the justices of the supreme court of the District.

This law of 1899, it would seem, remained in effect until June 30, 1903, when Congress made a provision in the deficiency appropriation act, that "proceedings * * to commit indigent insane persons * shall be in the equity court of the said District and shall be in conformity with the la specifically provides for such marshal's jury in these cases, so that it would seem that the code makes one provision for a trial before the court which had power to call a special jury and another for a trial by marshal's jury.

Congress again passed another act on April 27, 1904 (sees. 8436, 8437, 8438, 8439), authorizing any member of the Metropolitan police of the District to apprehend and detain, without warrant and officer to provide a superintendent of the District of the property of the provided his address could be given to the relatives of the insane person, provided his address could be found.

This act also authorizes the major and superintendent of the Metropolitan police to order the apprehension and detention without warrant of any indigent person alleged to be insane found elsewhere in the District than on the street, avenue, etc., as aforesaid—"whenever two or more responsible residents of the District of Columbia shall make and file an affidavit with said major and superintendent are setting forth that they believe the person therein named to be insane or of unsound mind, the length of time they have known such person "see string forth that they believe the person therein named to be insane or of unsound mind, the length of time they have known such person "see string forth that they believe the person therein named to be insane or of unsound mind, the length of time they have known such person "see shall order the apprehension and detention of any person upon the determinant of the apprehension and detention of any person provided the person alleged to be insane," etc.

It further states that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to place in the hospital, and the superintendent is authorized to receive upon the written request of the said Commissioners, for a period of time not exceeding thirty days, indigent persons alleged to be insane or of unsound mind, residents of or found within the District of Columbia, and alleged insane persons of homelical or otherwise danage

The act also provides for the appointment of a committee in case the person is declared busane and has property, and that, in case the person is declared busane and has property, and that, in case the person is declared busane and has property, and that, in case the person to the hospital shall immediately thereafter file with the clerk of the supreme court of the District his sworm statement that such person to declaring such person to be restored to his or her former legal and that such statement shall be smificient to authorize the court to pass an order declaring such person to be restored to his or her former legal it is appeared from a careful reading of the Revised Statutes and the law relative to the proceedure in cases of commitment that such commissions of civilinas to be made by due process of law or inquiry by a lurg.

The practice in we foolowed by the Commissioners of the District, is as follows:

"Application by relatives or friend-Amfant's le made by two rest. Application by relatives or friend-Amfant's le made by two rest. Applications by relatives or friend-Amfant's le made by two rest. Applications by relatives of friend-Amfant's le made by two rest. Applications by relatives of friend-Amfant's le made by two rest. Applications by relatives of friend-Amfant's le made by two rest. Applications by relatives of friend-Amfant's le made by two rest. Applications of the person; that they believe him to be of unsummarized by the property therein and the subject for declaring the linearity of the person; that they believe him to be of unsummarized by the provided friend b

The Commissioners of the District, after the temporary commitment, employ a physician to visit the patient and examine his mental condition, and this physician gives testimony in court at the time of the trial.

Dr. Presley C. Hunt, a witness called before the committee, for some time has been making such examinations, and the committee quotes from his testimony at page 623 of the record as follows:

"Before the case comes to trial, which under the law has to be within thirty days, I examine that case, generally a day or two days, after the trial comes on. I am allowed to look over the first examination paper made by the different surgeons, and then I examine the man himself to find out his mental condition, and I testify in court to such condition after the police surgeons have testified. If in my opinion the case has sufficiently recovered to be discharged, the jury, as a rule, takes my opinion and discharges the patient. Last week, for instance, there were two cases that were certified * * * that were discharged by order of the court on my testimony."

The Commissioners of the District, therefore, are the only authority for committing civilians to the hospital, and the committee is unable to see just what might happen if the said commissioners refuse to commit a person, especially after a trial before the court and jury as aforesaid.

said.

There is not before the committee evidence of any injustice having been done to anybody by reason of this method of commitment, but it believes that the methods thus stated, even if they be considered the only proper construction of the statutes, are unduly cumbersome, and that the procedure in these lunacy cases might be improved with beneficial results to all concerned.

The whole law as to the question of commitment of patients and the method of procedure in connection therewith should be changed, and a statute should be enacted in lieu thereof which would be clear and explicit, defining the lunacy proceedings in as simple a manner as possible.

It might properly be argued that the power given to the Commissioners of the District to commit patients after the findings of the jury and the order of the court thereon is superfluous, and there might also be a fair objection to the method of having a jury trial to inquire into the sanity or insanity of the person temporarily committed in every the sanity or insanity of the person temporarily committed in every case.

For instance, in the case of a jury trial, where the jury finds that the person before it is insane, the order of the judge presiding at such trial, upon such finding, might be sufficient for all purposes, and the patient committed upon such judge's order, thereby doing away with the necessity for a commitment by the commissioners.

And as to the objection to the jury trial in every case before commitment, it could be said that in some cases great hardship would ensue, both to the patient and his relatives. There is no doubt that in many, cases the patient is undoubtedly and perhaps dangerously insane and the publicity attending these trials humiliating to a degree.

And again it might be said with propriety that the whole question of insanity is purely and absolutely a medical one, and that it would be eminently proper to have the question decided by medical men rather than by a jury of laymen.

In many of the States of the Union the method of commitment is more simple than in the District of Columbia, and there is no necessity or provision for jury trials in every case nor for the cumbersome methods here practiced.

In the event of the enactment of a new lunacy law for the District of Columbia which would eliminate the necessity of a jury trial, as before mentioned, a provision could be made therein giving the patient, or his relatives or friends, the right to demand a jury trial before commitment, after notice given to him that application is to be made for his commitment. Provided the patient has no friend or relative, the power to request a jury trial might be given to some official of the District; for example, the Board of Charitles.

It is the opinion of the committee that there is urgent necessity for a change in the lunacy law, and it therefore recommends that a new statute be enacted in place of what it considers the vague and conflicting law on that subject at the present time.

Maryland.—Circuit court of the county, etc., shall cause a jury of twelve to be empaneled and pass upon the question, etc.

Ohio.—Probate judge on certificate of medical witnesses.

Oregon.—County judge may act. Testimony of one or more physicians.

Oregon.—County judge may act. Testimony of one or more physicians.

Pennsylvania.—Two or more reputable physicians under a personal examination made within one week of the date of their certificate, and the certificate to be duly acknowledged and sworn to or affirmed before a judge or magistrate of the county that such person has been examined, who shall certify to the genuineness of the signatures, etc., and the standing and good repute of all of the signers.

Rhode Island.—Judge of district court on certificate of two practicing physicians of good standing known to him as such.

South Carolina.—The superintendent and regents of the state lunatic asylum prepare questions to be answered. Judge of probate prepares answers, and, if patient can be admitted, judge of probate to examine two licensed practicing physicians, and the three shall make inquiry.

Tennessee.—Justice of peace may commit lunatic to jail until next term of court.

Texas.—County judge and jury of six men.

term of court.

Texas.—County judge and jury of six men.

Utah.—District judge. Testimoney of two physicians.

Vermont.—Judge of probate may act on certificate of two physicians.

Virginia.—Justices of the peace or county or corporation judge, with two physicians constitute a commission to act.

Washington.—Judge of superior court of any county may act on certificate of two physicians, but the alleged lunatic may demand a jury to decide upon the question of his insanity.

West Virginia.—Justice of the peace may act on testimony of one physician.

West Virginia.—Justice of the peace may act on testimony of one physician.
Wisconsin.—Judge may act, assisted by a jury if demanded, on testimony of two physicians.
Wyoming.—Jury as in civil actions.
Mississippi.—By order of chancery court after an inquest of lunacy by six freeholders.
It will therefore appear that in a great majority of States in the Union the trial by jury is not obligatory unless special demand therefor is made.
The following is a letter from Hon. William A. Maury, of the board of visitors of the hospital, to the superintendent as to a jury trial being necessary before commitment:

SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION, Washington, D. C., November 10, 1905.

Washington, D. C., November 10, 1905.

My Dear Sir: In my desire to promote the beneficent object of removing from our statute book the objectionable provision that an inquisition by jury shall be a necessary condition to the admission of a feeble-minded person to the Government Hospital for the Insane, I have gone over the legislation of the States of this Union on the subject of admission of the feeble-minded to hospitals, and I find that almost all of the States commit the important function of sending such persons to hospitals to some judicial officer, either a probate or circuit judge, and prescribe the nature of the evidence upon which his action shall be a seed.

prescribe the nature of the evidence upon which his action shall be based.

There are a few States where a common-law jury or something analogous is required. For instance, Alabama commits the function to the judge, leaving it discretionary with him to impanel a jury. Colorado authorizes action by the county court or some judge, and a jury if the alleged insane person shall so elect. Georgia requires that the ordinary to whom the petition for admission must be addressed must act upon the verdict of twelve men. Illinois empowers the judge of a county court, with a jury of six persons, one of whom shall be a physician. Kentucky requires a jury. Minnesota authorizes the judge of probate to act, assisted by two persons, one of whom shall be a duly qualified physician, and the three shall constitute a jury, etc. Missouri gives jurisdiction to the probate court and a jury. Montana provides for a judge or county commissioner, assisted by a jury of three persons. New York authorizes the judge to act, making it discretionary with him to impanel a jury to determine the question of lunacy. Nevada requires a district judge and two physicians. New Mexico requires a commissioner and a jury, as the circumstances seem to require. Maryland requires a jury of twelve to be impaneled. Washington requires the probate court to act, but allows the alleged lunatic to demand a jury. Wisconsin authorizes the judge to act, assisted by a jury, if demanded.

Of the States just enumerated it will be observed that only eight require inquisition by jury as a necessary condition to admission to a hospital for the insane.

The point made against the recent statute for the District authorizeng and its or the hospital on the order of the hospital on the product of the product of the product of the product of the posterior of the posterior of the product of the posterior of the posterior of the product of the posterior of the posterior of the product of the posterior of the poster dure inquisition by Jury as a necessary condition to admission to a hospital for the insane.

The point made against the recent statute for the District authorizing admission to the hospital on the order of the judge of the probate court was that due process of law under the Constitution required that there should be an inquisition by jury. The act of February 28, 1861, sections 4845, 4846, and 4847, Revised Statutes, provided for the admission of patients on the certificate of any judge or justice of the peace and order of the Secretary of the Interior, on the application by a member of the board of visitors; and it was not until Bryant's case came up on habeas corpus that the position was taken and sustained that the act of Congress, which had been acted upon for so many years, was unconstitutional, in that it authorized admission of patients into the hospital without a trial by jury. Nobody ever went so far as to say that people with malignant and contagious diseases could not be put in pesthouses without a previous inquisition by jury. And yet insanity is as much a disease against which the community needs protection as smallpox or leprosy or yellow fever.

The term "due process of law," as stated in the Constitution, is generally interprated by reference to what was due process of law at common law at the time the Constitution was adopted. Now, without having made any particular investigation into the subject, I venture to say that, so far from the insane having been entitled at that time to a trial by jury before being subjected to durance of any kind, they were treated with the utmost barbarity and cruelty, that they were cast into dungeons and loaded down with chains and fetters; in a word, they were treated as wild beasts, and, if I am not much mistaken, were dealt with without any regard for due process of law or the guaranties of human liberty.

Now, when we look at the act of Congress already referred to, we find that the above-mentioned provision with reference to the admission of the feeble-minded into the hospital is in complete accord with the legislation of a very large majority of the States of this Union. It would be absurd to say that the people of those States are living in Egyptian darkness as to what is called a great buttress of personal liberty. It is, indeed, a subject for regret that one of the last vestiges of cruelty to the insane, namely, this requirement of jury trial, should remain in this District. That the presence of these unfortunate people before a court and jury is an aggravation of their malady is well established.

There is a striking contrast between your efforts to have the word lished.

There is a striking contrast between your efforts to have the word "insane" struck out of the official title of your hospital and the determined way in which every effort made to do away with this cruel requirement of jury trial in this District is stoutly resisted.

You have no bars or gratings over your hospital windows because their presence would suggest a prison, and so have an injurious effect upon the minds of the unfortunate patients. Why, then, should we not, without delay, remove from our statute book this requirement of a jury because of its suggestiveness of a criminal proceeding?

Allow me to say, in conclusion, that I had no intention of writing such a letter when I began, and I hope you will treat it with the indulgence which is usually extended to matters of this importance done on the spur of the moment and flowing freely from a mind which has thought much upon the subject referred to.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, November 3, 1905.

Department of Justice,

Washington, November 3, 1905.

Sir: Your letter of the 28th ultimo is received in reply to department letter of the 18th ultimo in relation to the mental condition of one George Robinson, a United States prisoner removed to your institution for treatment from the New Jersey State penitentiary at Trenton.

The reason the department wrote you in regard to the condition of Robinson was because of his letter of the 16th ultimo, asking to be discharged on the ground that his sentence had expired.

You say that, while Robinson's term has expired, he is still a very insane man, with many delusions and tendencies which make him dangerous. You also say there might be some question as to the legal right of the hospital to hold the patient, but that you have always felt, however, that you could not take the responsibility of discharging an insane person into the community, even where a prisoner's term has expired. You ask for an expression of my views in the matter.

In reply you are advised that the case refered to by you is similar to the cases of a number of United States prisoners who are confined in insane wards of state prisoners provides for the care of those continuing insane after the expiration of sentence who have no friends to whom they can be sent.

Whenever you have any insane United States prisoners in your institution whose terms of imprisonment have expired, it is suggested that you take steps to turn them over to their relations or friends unless their mental condition is such you would not care to take the responsibility of such a course, in which case the prisoners should be detained in your institution.

Respectfully,

H. M. Hoyt,

Acting Attorney-General.

H. M. HOYT, Acting Attorney-General.

Dr. WILLIAM A. WHITE,
Superintendent Government Hospital for the Insane,
Washington, D. C.

In 1907 the Society of Nervous and Mental Diseases appointed a committee to examine into all matters connected with the care of the insane in the District, and an extract from their report follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 5, 1907.

Members of the Society of Nervous and Mental Diseases:

Your committee appointed at the last meeting to make a report at the next meeting on the care of the insane in the District of Columbia has held two meetings on the evenings of the 2d and 5th instants, respectively, and so far as time and opportunity permitted have acquainted themselves with the details regarding which the society desires quainted themselves with the report.

The insane, and those suspected of being insane, are cared for in three institutions. The Government Hospital for the Insane, where they are only received upon commitment papers signed by the District Commissioners in accordance with the statute; * * * About 400 patients are admitted to the government hospital from the District each year. * * *

Year. * *

Your committee is of the opinion that, in addition to the matters covered thus far in our report, your instructions were sufficiently broad to include recommendations touching the matter of lunacy legislation. Up to February 23, 1905, the date of the present act establishing a method of procedure in the matter of committing insane persons in the District of Columbia, commitment was had by marshal's jury. No comment is needed upon this antiquated method, and it is now, fortunately, a matter of history.

While the act of February 23, 1905, is a great improvement upon this old method of procedure, it has only gone a short way toward curing the defects of lunacy legislation in the District. The principal defect in the present method of procedure is the necessity for commitment in open court by inquisition before a jury. This is a great hardship both to the patient and his relatives. It is humiliating and can not possibly do good, but on the contrary tends to harm by placing the unfortunate person accused of insanity in the same category as one accused of crime. In fact, the whole method of procedure is the method of the criminal court. If one were to attend these hearings and see the method in operation he would constantly be impressed with the fact that both by method of procedure and terminology employed, the alleged insane person is placed on a par with the criminal. He is cited into court, accused of insanity upon an affidavit of lunacy, signed by two citizens, in which they state that—

"If the insane person be permitted to remain at liberty * * other rights of persons and of property * * will be jeopardized, the preservation of the public peace imperiled and the commission of crime rendered probable."

Nothing appears to indicate that the unfortunate insane person is committed to the institution for his own welfare to be treated for the disease with which he is afflicted, and, if possible, be restored to health and useful citizenship, the implication being that he is removed from the community because he is a dangerous element therein. The question of insanity is solely and absolutely a medical one to be solved by medical men, and there is no more sense in submitting such a question to a jury of laymen than there is in submitting the question of the existence of typhoid fever.

Your committee is of the opinion that the lunacy legislation of the District requires complete revision in such a way that relief may be extended to the insane because of their illness, rather than upon the basis of probable criminal acts, as under the present law. In the main, the law should provide that, upon satisfactory medical evidence, the court should be empowered to commit directly without public proceedings in open court. The safety of all parties concerned can be readily taken care of by providing, as the New York law does, for example, that a hearing before a jury can be had upon the motion of the alleged insane person, or a friend or relative on his behalf, or upon the court's own motion. Experience shows th

WM. A. WHITE. D. PERCY HICKLING. D. K. SHUTE.

From the foregoing opinions as to the validity of commitment without a jury trial, from the examination of the laws of the several States of the Union, and from the opinions of experts and all others who have investigated the subject there would seem to be no doubt as to the humanity, safety, and propriety of doing away with the obligatory jury trial. The old treatment of the insane started with the idea that insanity was crime, and therefore juries were necessary; the new treatment says insanity is disease, and therefore doctors should determine its existence. Formerly we had asylums; now we have hospitals.

The following is the letter from the commissioners approving the proposed legislation:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Washington, February 29, 1908.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

Washington, February 29, 1908.

Dear Sir: The commissioners have the honor to recommend favorable action upon H. R. 12898, entitled "A bill to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes," which you referred to them for their views thereon, if amended by inserting the words "equity court" in lieu of the words "a special term for orphans' court business," in line 9, page 1, and by inserting the words "Provided, That in the case of indigent patients the examination shall be made by the police surgeons, who shall receive no extra compensation on account of such service," after the word "Columbia," in line 14, page 3.

The bill, if enacted, will provide for more humane and enlightened proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane. The main object of the bill is to do away with the jury system by providing for a hearing before a judge alone, unless in such cases as a hearing by a jury is requested. The commissioners are of the opinion that the ordeal of a jury trial results in a great hardship to the patient and often aggravates the severity of the mental disorder. The fact that a jury trial is required no doubt also frequently delays recourse to prompt treatment in incipient cases, and thereby lessens the chances of permanent recovery. For these reasons it would appear that a hearing before a judge alone and a requirement for the textimony of two reputable physicians would subserve the interests of the patient and friends.

Sections 2, 3, and 4 of the bill seem to guarantee ample protection against the danger of improper confinement. The enactment of this bill would increase the cost in lunacy proceedings by probably about $7,500 per annum on account of the provision of a per diem compensation of $10 to be paid to the examining physicians. The question of indigent patients may be made by the police surgeons and by the physicians on duty at the psychopathic wards when such wards are est have a law enacted providing for trial without jury and allow the matter of its validity to be judicially determined.

Very respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hop. J. VAN VECHTEN OLCOTT,

House of Representatives.

Your committee did not approve of making it the duty of the police surgeons to examine the indigent insane. The present board of police surgeons could not perform this work in addition to their present duties, and so nothing would be saved in expense, as new surgeons would have to be appointed. Apart from this, the appointment should be made by the court to carry out in this particular also the thought that insanity is not crime.

Your committee appends the opinion by Mr. Justice Barnard on the general subject of commitment, and holding the constitutionality of such commitment even though no jury be had.

[Supreme court of the District of Columbia. In the matter of Emily Murdock, alleged lunatic.]

Murdock, alleged lunatic.]

Mr. Justice Barnard delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case Emily Murdock, by Churchwell O. Chenault, files a petition averring that she is a citizen of the United States, and that her last place of legal residence was the city of Philadelphia, but that for the past five years she has been confined in the Government Hospital for the Insane, in this District.

That on January 14, 1902, she was temporarily sojourning in Washington City, when on petition of one John M. George, a stranger to her, and on the affidavits of Dr. William W. Wagner and Dr. John W. Shaw, physicians in this District, she was arrested and detained, without warrant of law, and on January 17, 1902, on testimony given in open court by said physicians, before one of the justices of this court, she was adjudged and declared to be a lunatic, and was ordered to be placed in the custody of the superintendent of said government hospital for the purpose of care and curative treatment, where she has been ever since, save on one or two occasions, when she was allowed out on parole, in the custody of her mother.

She states that such confinement and restraint of liberty are without due process of law, she being held only under the order of commitment given by the said justice; that she is now mentally capable of taking care of herself and her property, but that the superintendent refuses to discharge her, and that the proceedings in the said lunacy case, No. 760, in this court, which she makes part of her petition, were unlawful, and she therefore prays for a writ of habeas corpus, in order that she may be released and discharged from such unlawful detention and restraint.

The said superintendent has filed his return to the petition, in which 760, in this court, which she makes part of her petition, were unlawful, and she therefore prays for a writ of habeas corpus, in order that she may be released and discharged from such unlawful detention and restraint.

The said superintendent has filed his return to the petition, in which he says that he detains the said Emily Murdock in compliance with and by authority of an order of this court dated January 17, 1902, a copy of which is attached to his answer.

He further says that she is incapable of caring for herself, and that the only person who comes forward to vouch for her is her mother, who is equally incapable of caring for her daughter and is herself an object of charity. That her conduct was such when she has been on parole that complaints have been made, and she has been taken back and is now detained in the said hospital.

A copy of said order is annexed to the answer, from which it appears that "it is adjudged that the said Emily Murdock is an insane person; and it appearing to the court that the said person should be committed, it is ordered that said Emily Murdock, until otherwise ordered by competent authority, be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane in the District of Columbia for the purpose of care and curative treatment."

Counsel for the petitioner and respondent have taken certain testimony before the court as to the present mental condition of the said petitioner, the witnesses on behalf of the petitioner being herself, her mother, and two other lay witnesses, but no medical testimony has been offered in her hehalf. The testimony on behalf of the respondent was that of a physician who has been acquainted with the said petitioner, since her commitment to the asylum, and it was of such character, when taken in connection with the testimony and appearance of the petitioner herself, as to make the court hesitate to discharge her on the ground that she was now mentally sane and capable of taking care of herself and her property.

Thereupon counsel for the respective parties h rovisions of the Constitution, and that a proceeding under it was not "due process of law."

Counsel for the respondent insist that the proceeding was under the said act of Congress, and that it was "due process of law," notwithstanding there was no provision in said law for a jury trial.

The said act is entitled "An act to change the proceedings for commitment to the Government Hospital for the Insane in certain cases, and for other purposes."

It provides that a petition shall be filed, signed, and sworn to by some responsible resident of the District; and that a copy shall be served on the alleged lunatic and another on the Commissioners of the District; and that thereafter the court shall appoint two or more physicians not connected with any hospital for the insane to examine the alleged lunatic and to testify as to his mental condition; and that the court shall require the presence of the alleged lunatic at the hearing, unless for good reason it shall direct otherwise by an order stating such reason; and that the order of the court on the hearing shall be made without an inquisition by jury, and all the proceedings shall be entered in the minutes of the court.

This act was in force when the petitioner was examined and committed, being specially excepted from repeal by section 1636 of the code.

Said act remained in force until the 3d of March, 1903, when Congress expressly repealed all of said act except section 7, which requires the commissioners to return nonresident insane to their homes when practicable, and provides that thereafter proceedings by the Commissioners of the District to commit indigent insane persons to the Government Hospital for the Insane shall be taken in conformity with the law in force in said District on January 30, 1899. (32 Stat. L., 1043.)

That proceedings was based on the inquisition of a jury presided over by the marshal of the District, which first returned a verdict that the alleged lunatic was of unsound mind.

Counsel for the respondent claim that the case In re William M. Bryant, Third Mackey, page 489, decided by this court in general term in 1885, is an authority that should be conclusive and binding upon the court now in disposing of the question presented in this case.

At the time of that decision the court determined that there was no provision purporting to be due process of law which would authorize the commitment of a person to the Government Hospital for the Insane other than the finding of a jury.

Mr. Justice James says in his opinion in said case:

"This whole matter is regulated by the Maryland statutes of 1785, chapter 72, section 6, which contemplates that the person whose affairs the chancellor is to have control of shall first be found to be insane by a jury of inquiry. There must be a regular adjudication of the question by due process of law, without which even the chancellor can not act, and due process of law in establishing the insanity of a person has long been declared to be by inquiry through a jury. It would be impossible, therefore, that we should recognize the unsworn statements of two physicians to be due process of law."

He further states: "This commitment has no resemblance to the cases of persons in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps, or, perhaps, even in the revenue service. There the parties are already under control. A soldier can be made to go into the hospital for medical treatment upon the judgment of his superior officers, and they can order him to this saylum if they think that he ought to go there, and in that case the officer's action would be due process of law. But in the case of a civilian, the order of an executive officer upon the mere unsworn certificate of physicians can not be called due process of law."

The opinion concludes: "We hold, therefore, first, that these sections of the Revised

But this does not answer the question presented for consideration in the case now before the court. The question to be considered is, Can there be due process of law as to the custody of unfortunate persons alleged to be of unsound mind, short of giving them a trial by jury? And if so, whether the said act of January 31, 1899, provides such proceeding as amounts to "due process of law," as defined by the

And it so, whether the sain act of 'January 31, 1899, provides such proceeding as amounts to "due process of law," as defined by the courts.

An inquiry into the alleged lunacy of a person is not a criminal prosecution or the trial of a crime. In construing a similar provision in the state constitution of lowa the supreme court of that State said: "It is clear to us that this provision applies only to criminal prosecutions or accusations, for offenses against the criminal law, where it is sought to punish the offender by fine or imprisonment. The inquest of lunacy by a board of commissioners is in no sense a criminal proceeding. The restraint of an insane person is not designed as punishment for any act done. The insane are, by the law, taken into the care and custody of the State for treatment for their unfortunate infirmity." (County of Black Hawk v. Springer, 58 Iowa, 417; In re Breesee, 82 Iowa, 578.)

In Louisiana a statute providing that an alleged lunatic should be brought before a judge of chambers, and that, after inquiry, if the judge thought he should be sent to the insane asylum, he should order his commitment, was held to be valid by the supreme court of that State, as providing a proceeding which amounted to due process of law. The court says: "The lawgiver has thus wisely provided for the protection of both such person and society; for cases may and do arise in which a most summary disposition should be made of those unfortunate persons whose mental derangement may be such as to prove a just cause of alarm to individuals and to the public at large." (In re William Ross, 38 La. Ann., 523.)

The said court, citing the Dartmouth College case (4 Wheat., 519), also uses this language:

"By the words 'due process of law,' found in the organic law, is meant: That every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. By the law of the land is intended a general law; a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inq imply that, in every case, the parties interested shall have a hearing in court."

The only case cited by counsel for the petitioner is the said Bryant case, in Third Mackey.

That decision was rendered at a time when there was no statute law purporting to furnish any court proceeding for the compulsory commitment of insane persons to the asylum, except the statute of Maryland, of 1785, therein referred to.

That act placed the custody of the person and estate of any person who was an idiot, lunatic, or non compos mentis under the control of the court of chancery, and the chancellor was authorized to appoint a committee and to superintend, direct, and govern the concerns of such persons, both as to the care of his person and the management of his estate, by such orders and decrees as to him might seem just and proper.

At that time, also, the established course was for the chancellor to have a jury of inquiry before undertaking such management and care, whether the relief prayed for was as to the care of the person or as to the estate of the alleged lunatic. In that case the court recognized that the statutes relating to service in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps did provide a means by which persons in that service could be compulsorily confined in the said hospital, and says that the action of an officer in so sending a soldier, sailor, or marine to the said hospital would be due process of law.

It appears from the said opinion, also, that the court was there called upon to pass judgment in a matter where there was no sworn statement or evidence of anyone, and no adversary proceedings of any kind in court, but only an ex parte proceeding out of court by two physicians, not under oath, which the court said could not be recognized to be due process of law. There was no judicial ascertainment of the fact of insanity.

process of law. There was no judicial ascertainment of the fact of insanity.

The court finally concludes in that case that the sections of the Revised Statutes in question do not contemplate compulsory seclusion in the said asylum without due process of law, and that the whole matter was then regulated by the said act of Maryland of 1785, which included an inquiry by jury.

I am not able to see that this case disposes of the question now presented to me.

Since that decision Congress passed the act of January 31, 1899, which expressly requires that the judicial decision necessary to control the court in directing the custody of the alleged lunatic shall be made by the court without an inquisition by jury. It provides for notice to and the presence of the alleged lunatic, and makes the finding a matter to be placed on the minutes of the court as a public record, and it safeguards any person alleged to be of unsound mind by making the proceeding one in open court and to be decided on sworn testimony.

It is not certain that if this statute had been before the court in general term when it heard the Bryant case, that the court would not have reached the conclusion that what is here expressly provided for as a public hearing in court on legal testimony is "due process of law."

There are many cases which hold that it is not essential that there should be a jury trial before a citizen can be deprived of liberty or property.

For example, proceedings for contempt: proceedings for condemnation

There are many cases which hold that it is not essential that there should be a jury trial before a citizen can be deprived of liberty or property.

For example, proceedings for contempt; proceedings for condemnation of property under the power of eminent domain; assessment and collection of taxes; proceedings having regard to public morals, health, and safety under the police power; and decrees of courts of equity, both as to custody of persons and disposition of property.

The cases above cited, which have construed similar provisions in state constitutions, are persuasive that an inquiry into the mental condition of any person alleged to be of unsound mind is not a criminal prosecution and does not require a jury under the third article of the Constitution or the sixth amendment.

I, therefore, am forced to the point, in this case, of determining the meaning of "due process of law," as applied to such inquiry, and as used in the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

There is perhaps no legal phrase known, which has been more variously defined, than this one phrase, "due process of law."

In 8 Cyc., 1080, this definition is given: "Due process of law in each particular case means such an exertion of the powers of the Government as the settled maxims of the law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs."

In the notes, and further in the text, various other definitions are given, some of which are:

"Ordinary judicial proceedings in court."

"A trial according to some settled course of proceeding."

"Lawful judicial proceeding in a court of competent jurisdiction."

"Some legal procedure in which the person proceeded against, if he is to be concluded thereby, shall have an opportunity to defend himself."

"The right of the person affected thereby to be present before the tribunal which pronounces judgment upon the question of life, liberty, or property, and to have the right of con

"An orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case, in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard, and to defend, enforce, and protect his rights."

"A requirement of action or abstinence, binding upon and affecting alike each and every member of the community of the same class, or of similar circumstances, enacted for the general public good or welfare."

alike each and every member of the community of the same class, or of similar circumstances, enacted for the general public good or welfare."

The cases from which these and other similar definitions are taken embrace state and federal decisions in great numbers, and also Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, wherein that learned author discusses this question at some length.

In the case of Nobles v. Georgia (168 U. S., 398), Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court, and quoted with approval the case of Bonds v. Tennessee (Martin & Yerger, 142).

In the case referred to, after citing authorities, the court said:

"From this it appears that inspection by the court is one of the legal modes of trying the fact of insanity, and nothing appears in the record of this case to show that the discretion of the court, in adopting the mode pursued, was erroneously exercised."

Mr Justice White concluded his opinion as follows:

"It being demonstrated by reason and authority that at common law a suggestion made after verdict and sentence of insanity did not give rise to an absolute right on the part of a convict to have such issue tried before the court and to a jury, but addressed itself to the discretion of the judge, it follows that the manner in which such question should be determined was purely a mater of legislative regulation. It was, therefore, a subject within the control of the State of Georgia. Because we have confined our opinion exclusively to the question before us—that is, the right arising on a suggestion of insanity after sentence—we must not be understood as implying that a different rule would prevail after verdict and up to and including sentence, or as passing upon the question whether, under the fourteenth amendment, a State is without power to relegate the decision of a question of insanity, when raised before conviction to such apt and special tribunal as the law might deem best."

The language of the fourteenth amendment is as follows:

"The language is, in effect, identical with that u of law" clause under the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. He uses this language, on page 389:

"This court has never attempted to define with precision the words 'due process of law." Nor is it necessary to do so in this case. It is sufficient to say that there are certain immutable principles of justice which inhere in the very idea of free government, which no member of the Union may disregard, as that no man shall be condemned in his person or property without due notice and an opportunity of being heard in his defense."

in his defense."

Mr. Justice Matthews, in the case of Hurtado v. California (110 U. S., 516), discusses the words "due process of law," as used in the fifth and fourteenth amendments; and upholds the constitution of California, which authorizes the prosecution of felonies by information, instead of by indictment by grand jury. On page 585, he says:

"Due process of law in the latter (the fifth amendment) refers to that law of the land which derives its authority from the legislative powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution of the United States, exercised within the limits therein prescribed and interpreted according to the principles of the common law. In the fourteenth amendment, by parity of reason, it refers to that law of the land in each State which derives its authority from the inherent and reserved powers of the State, exerted within the limits of those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions and the greatest security for which resides in the right of the people to make their own laws and alter them at their pleasure."

and political institutions and the greatest security for which resides in the right of the people to make their own laws and alter them at their pleasure."

The act of January 31, 1899, seems to me to be a proper exercise of legislative authority and to provide an orderly, reasonable, and safe method for fairly determining the mental condition of all unfortunate persons alleged to be of unsound mind, so far at least as to authorize their compulsory commitment to an institution such as the Government Hospital for the Insane for care and curative treatment.

The object of the law is for the protection and benefit of the unfortunate individual whose mind is affected and at the same time is in the interest of humanity and for the common welfare of the community. After the repeal of this statute, the old method of having a jury of inquiry and testimony to be taken before such jury in the presence of the marshal, but not in open court, continued in force as the mode of procedure until the 23d day of February, 1905, when the present law was enacted requiring the inquiry to be made before the court and jury in open court (33 Stat. L., 740), so that we have had, within a comparatively short time, three different methods of procedure to accomplish the same purpose, all of them evidently enacted by Congress equally in the interest of the community and of the individual.

My experience and observation under the three different statutes as a judge leads me to the conclusion that the said act of January 31, 1899, is perhaps the best of the three for the individual who is suffering from mental disease, as there is less disturbance to the patient when he is brought into open court before a single judge than there is when he is brought into open court before a single judge than there is when he is brought into open court before a single judge than there is when he is brought into open court before a single judge than there is when he is brought into open court before a single judge than there is when he is brought into pen cour

Mr. OLCOTT. The bill gives the right of a jury trial to the alleged lunatic, upon his or her demand, or upon the demand of a relative or friend or other person designated by the court, and it further provides that within ten days after the commitment the same parties, or either of them, may appeal to a justice other than the justice before whom the matter was brought, which latter justice shall cause a jury to be summoned and shall try the question of such insanity.

I wish to correct another erroneous statement made by the gentleman from Florida. The gentleman states that this bill should have been reported to the Committee on the Judiciary rather than the Committee on the District of Columbia, for the reason that the Government Hospital for the Insane was originally used for only one class of patients—the insane of the army and the navy.

As a matter of fact, and for a number of years, the hospital has been receiving yearly between 600 and 700 patients, 400 of whom come from the District of Columbia. This seems to be a very good reason why the bill should have been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I might add that, in addition to the approval of this bill by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, Judge William A. Maury, of the board of visitors, and the Society of Mental and Nervous Diseases, as set forth in the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia, it received also the approval of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, Mr. Justice Barnard, the Washington Board of Trade, and the Chamber of Commerce of the District of Columbia.

One word more: I have had a careful investigation made into the statutes of the various States of the Union in regard to the method of commitment of patients to hospitals for the insane, and I have incorporated in the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia an abstract of such statutes. Reference is made to the insanity laws of 43 States and 2 Territories, showing the method of commitment of patients, and of these only 8 States have laws requiring obligatory jury trials.

It will be interesting to read the extract from the report of the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane for 1905, found in the report accompanying the bill, under the heading of "Lunacy legislation," where good reasons are set forth why the bill should be passed.

As I said before, a jury trial in every case is harsh, unjust, and wicked, and has a tendency to treat the alleged lunatic as a criminal rather than as a person suffering with a mental dis-The bill is fair and simple, and can do no possible harm.

I sincerely hope that on Monday next, when the bill comes up for consideration, it will be passed.

In conclusion and for the special information of the gentleman from Florida, who states that the bill to change the method of commitment of patients in the District of Columbia is the most outrageous measure that he has ever met with, and which strikes at the very foundation of the Government itself, I desire to state that the insanity laws of the State of Florida prescribe for the commitment of insane persons upon the order of a circuit judge or a county judge.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7872) to promote the administration of justice in the navy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is agreed to. There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is that a request to return a bill to the Senate?

The SPEAKER.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the bill we have just sent to conference

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It sounded a good deal like it.
The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill on the same subject on which the House just acted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President (S. Doc. No. 697), which was read, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

The message is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Commissioner of Labor and Special Agent Victor S. Clark, of the Bureau of Labor, relating to an investigation conducted by them into the office of the building inspector of the District of Columbia, and I recommend that the Congress authorize the appointment of a commission of three members, with powers to administer oaths, to make a thorough investigation of the building-inspection department of the District of Columbia, and that an appropriation of $3,500 be made to defray the expenses of this commission.

I append hereto an extract from a recent verdict of a coroner's jury and certain letters which explain the reason of the investigation conducted by the Bureau of Labor.

I agree fully with the position taken in the report from the Bureau of Labor that the building-inspection department should not be left under suspicion as the result of unproven charges. In the interest of the building investigation of the conduct of his office. If that important department of the District government is inefficient or improperly conducted, its personnel should be reorganized. If, on the other hand, the criticism of it is unfounded, this should be demonstrated to the public's satisfaction and the building inspector vindicated and sustained.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1909.

SPECIAL MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following special message from the President, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return, without approval, H. R. 16954, entitled "An act to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses." I do this with extreme reluctance, because I fully I do this with extreme reluctance, because I fully realize the importance of supplying the Director of the Census at as early a date as possible with the force necessary to the carrying on of his work. But it is of high consequence to the country that the statistical work of the census shall be conducted with entire accuracy. This is as important from the standpoint of business and industry as from the scientific standpoint. It is, therefore, in my judgment, essential that the result should not be open to the suspicion of bias on political and personal grounds; that it should not be open to the reasonable suspicion of being a waste of the people's money and a Section 7 of the act provides in effect that appointments to the census shall be under the spoils system, for this is the real meaning of the provision that they shall be subject only to noncompetitive examination. The proviso is added that they shall be selected without regard to political party affiliations. But there is only one way to guarantee that they shall be selected without regard to politics and on merit, and that is by choosing them after competitive examination from the lists of eligibles provided by the Civil Service Commission. The present Director of the Census in his last report states the exact fact about these noncompetitive examinations when he says:

"A noncompetitive examination means that every one of the

"A noncompetitive examination means that every one of the many thousands who will pass the examinations will have an equal right to appointment, and that personal and political pressure must in the end, as always before, become the determining factor with regard to the great body of these temporary employments. I can not too earnestly urge that the Director of the Census be relieved from this unfortunate situation."

To provide that the clerks and other employees shall be appointed after noncompetitive examination, and yet to provide that they shall be selected without regard to political party affiliations, means merely that the appointments shall be treated as the perquisites of the politicians of both parties, instead of as the perquisites of the politicians of one party. I do not believe in the doctrine that to the victor belong the spoils; but I think even less of the doctrine that the spoils shall be divided without a fight by the professional politicians on both sides; and this would be the result of permitting the bill in its present shape to become a law. Both of the last censuses, the Eleventh and the Twelfth, were taken under a provision of law excluding competition; that is, necessitating the appointments being made under the spoils system. Every man competent to speak with authority because of his knowledge of and familiarity with the work of those censuses has stated that the result was to produce extravagance and demoralization. Mr. Robert P. Porter, who took the census of 1890, states that—

"The efficiency of the decennial census would be greatly improved and its cost materially lessened if it were provided that the employees should be selected in accordance with the terms of the civil-service law."

Mr. Frederick H. Wines, the Assistant Director of the Census of 1900, states as follows:

"A mathematical scale was worked out by which the number of 'assignments' to each Senator and Representative was determined in advance, so many appointments to a Senator, a smaller number to a Representative, half as many to a Democrat as a Republican, and in Democratic States and congressional districts the assignments were made to the Republican state and district committees. The assignees named in the first instance the persons to be examined. They were afterwards furnished each with a list of those named who had 'passed' and requested to name those who they desired to have appointed. Vacancies were filled in the same manner. This system was thoroughly satisfactory to the majority of the politicians interested, though there were a few who refused to have anything to do with it. The effect upon the bureau was, as may readily be imagined, thoroughly demoralizing."

Mr. Carroll D. Wright, who had charge of the Census Bureau after the census of 1890, estimates that $2,000,000, and more than a year's time, would have been saved if the census force had been brought into the classified service, and adds:

"I do not hesitate to say one-third of the amount expended under my own administration was absolutely wasted, and wasted principally on account of the fact that the office was not under civil service rules. * * * In October, 1893, when I took charge of the Census Office, there was an office force of 1,092. There had been a constant reduction for many months and this was kept up without cessation till the close of the census. There was never a month after October, 1893, that the clerical force reached the number then in office; nevertheless, while these general reductions were being made and in the absence of any necessity for the increase of the force, 389 new appointments were made."

This of course meant the destruction of economy and efficiency for purely political considerations.

In view of the temporary character of the work, it would be well to waive the requirements of the civil service law as regards geographical apportionment, but the appointees should be chosen by competitive examination from the lists provided by the Civil Service Commission. The noncompetitive examination in a case like this is not only vicious, but is in effect a fraud upon the public. No essential change is effected by providing that it be conducted by the Civil Service Commission; and to provide that the employees shall be selected without regard to political party affiliations is empty and misleading, unless, at the same time, it is made effective in the only way in which it is possible to make it effective, that is by providing that the examination shall be made competitive.

I also recommend that if provision is made that the census printing work may be done outside the Government Printing Office, it shall be explicitly provided that the Government authorities shall see that the eight-hour law is applied in effective fashion to these outside offices.

Outside of these matters, I believe that the bill is, on the whole, satisfactory and represents an improvement upon previous legislation on the subject. But it is of vital consequence that we should not once again permit the usefulness of this great decennial undertaking on behalf of the whole people to be marred by permitting it to be turned into an engine to further the self-interest of that small section of the people which makes a profession of politics. The evil effects of the spoils system and of the custom of treating appointments to the public service as personal perquisites of professional politicians are peculiarly evident in the case of a great public work like the taking of the census, a work which should emphatically be done for the whole people and with an eye single to their interest.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1909.

REPRINT OF CENSUS BILL.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the census bill as it passed the two Houses of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 6, 1909.

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale, offered the following praver:

Let us praise famous men and our fathers who begot us. The Lord hath wrought great glory by them through His great power from the beginning. Leaders of the people by their counsel and by their knowledge of learning meet for the people, wise and eloquent in their instructions. All these were honored in their generations and were the glory of their times. There be of them that have left a name behind them, that their praises might be reported. And some there will be who have no memorial, who are perished as they had never been. But these were merciful men, whose righteousness hath not been forgotten. The people will tell of their wisdom and the congregation will show forth their praise.

Let us pray.

Father, we praise Thee, we thank Thee, every day of our lives we thank Thee, for the fathers who were before us, for the men who made this country, for that country whose God is the Lord, for the men who made this Senate and the House of Representatives, who ordained this Government of the people, for the people, by the people.

We thank the living God; and we ask Thee, Father, to be with us, the children and the children's children of these men, to lead us where we need leading, to teach us always, to en-liven us with the Holy Spirit, with Thy divine light. We remember before Thee those men who in this Senate have led it forward in dignity and honor before this people. Bless them. Bless us. Be with this people, Father, as a father with his children. We ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

REPORT OF PRINTING INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropria-tions and ordered to be printed (S. Rept. No. 932):

Memorial relating to the "quarry reserve" and a strip of land on the boundary of the "quartermaster depot," being parts of the Fort Yuma Military Reservation, at Yuma, Ariz.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the twenty-fifth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, respectfully represent that:
Whereas the town of Yuma, on the 28th day of October, 1876 (at the time the village of Yuma), deeded to the territorial board of prison commissioners, for territorial prison purposes, a lot, piece, or parcel of land of the town site of Yuma, designated by the official survey and field notes of said town site and on the official map of said survey as "penitentiary grounds," with a reversion in said conveyance that, in the event of the prison being removed from the town and county of

Yuma, the land so conveyed, with all improvements thereon, should revert to the village or town; and

Whereas the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on September 9, 1904, advised the town of Yuma that the 2½ acres of land located in sections 35 and 36, township 16 south, range 22 east, S. B. M., known as the "quarry reserve," and being a part of the Fort Yuma Military Reservation, was included in the patent to the town site of the town of Yuma; and

Whereas the said prison commissioners, needing said "quarry reserve" for territorial prison purposes, to put additional buildings thereon, and the town of Yuma, acting upon the advice of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, believing that said tract of land belonged to the town, did lease said tract to said prison commissioners, and the Territory afterwards placed valuable improvements thereon, under said lease; and sloner of the General Land Unice, believing that said tract of land by longed to the town, did lease said tract to said prison commissioners, and the Territory afterwards placed valuable improvements thereon, under said lease; and

Whereas in 1907 the Commissioner of the General Land Office again advised the said town of Yuma that said "quarry reserve" was not included in the patent of said town site; and

Whereas the said territorial prison has been removed from said town of Yuma, by legislative act, to the town of Florence, in Pinal County, in said Territory, and the new prison is near completion, and all of the immates of the old prison will be removed from Yuma shortly, and the grounds of the old prison, with all improvements thereon, will revert to said town of Yuma, under said deed; and

Whereas the town of Yuma is in need of said improvements on said "quarry reserve" for townhall, town offices, and calaboose or town jail: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That we earnestly and respectfully ask that Congress pass some enabling act, to the end that the title to said tract of land be granted in fee to said town of Yuma.

Your memorialists, the twenty-fifth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, do further respectfully represent that—

Whereas when the said town site of Yuma was officially surveyed, in 1876, the street designated as First street in said town was laid out as one of the principal highways of said town, being one of the widest and most important streets in said town, being one of the widest and most important streets in said town, being one of the widest and most important streets in said town, being one of the wides and most important principal through the full width of the town, 90 feet wide east and west, clear down into the Yuma Valley. Mr. SCOTT presented a resolution of the West Virginia State Horticultural Society, which, with the accompanying letter, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WEST VIRGINIA STATE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY-TREASURER,
Morgantown, W. Va., February 4, 1909.

Office of the Secretary-Treasurer,

Morgantown, W. Va., February 4, 1909.

Hon. N. B. Scott,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir.: At the annual meeting of the State Horticultural Society held at Charleston, January 28-30, the following resolution was adopted, and the secretary instructed to forward a copy to each United States Senator and Representative from this State:

"Resolved, That this society express itself as being in sympathy with a national law for the uniform packing, grading, and branding of fruit intended for interstate or foreign shipment, provided that in defining the legal size of the several grades of apples, the law shall not be worded in such a way as to discriminate against apples of high quality whose size is smaller than that usually spoken of as 'No. 1 apples.'"

This action was taken because it was understood that there was a bill before Congress, or to be presented to Congress, which limited the size of a No. 1 apple to specimens at least 2½ inches in diameter. There are grown in this State large quantities of Grimes, Golden, Winesap, and other varieties of apples which, while of very fine quality, do not in many cases grow to the specific size mentioned. It would be manifestly unfair to make such apples grade as No. 2 when apples of such poor quality as the Ben Davis may be sold as No. 1.

The question of more uniformity in the packing, grading, and marking of closed packages of apples is one of great importance to the fruit-growing interest of this State, for they can not hope to secure the largest demand for and the largest returns from their crops, until they can establish a reputation for a uniform, honest pack of apples.

The fruit growers of the Northwestern States have succeeded in establishing an enviable reputation for their fruit in this way. They have two standard-sized boxes, both of which hold about 2,200 cubic inches. I understand that the proposed measure establishes the standard box at something over 2,500 cubic inches. It would be very unfair to that section of our country a

Mr. GAMBLE presented a joint resolution of the legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of South Dakota, ss:

I, Samuel C. Polley, secretary of state of South Dakota, and keeper of the great seal thereof, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. S, as passed by the legislature of 1909, and of the whole thereof, and has been compared with the original now on file in this office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota. Done at the city of Pierre this 2d day of February, 1909.

SAMUEL C. POLLEY,

Samuel C. Polley, Secretary of State.

A joint resolution memorializing Congress to open Indian reservations in South Dakota.

In South Dakota.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):
Whereas over 10,000,000 acres of fine agricultural land in the west half of the State is Indian reservation, unimproved and undeveloped, and so situated as to retard greatly the development of territory already opened to settlement in the west half of the State; and Whereas the opening of the land would benefit the Indians, would be the home of thousands of settlers, and would materially add to the revenues of the State:
We therefore submit to our United States Senators and Members of Congress the advisability of causing such treaties to be made with the Indians on each of the reservations within this State and the enactment of such laws as will open all or as much as possible of the territory embraced in these reservations with the utmost dispatch.

I hereby certify that the within act originated in the house and was known in the house files as house joint resolution No. 8.

JAMES W. CONE, Chief Clerk.

L. M. Simons,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of sundry business firms of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the repeal of the duty on hides, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Cloquet, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the Indians of the Fond du Lac Indian Reservation, in that State, the right and privilege of alienating their lands, and that the trust patents now held by them be declared to give them a fee title to their allotments, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the American Society of Equity, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the repeal of the duty on wheat, barley, and other grains, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT presented a memorial of the legislature of Utah, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States asking that that portion of Arizona Territory lying north of the Colorado River be annexed to the State of Utah.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

gress of the United States:

Whereas that portion of the Territory of Arizona lying north of the Colorado River, by reason of its geographical position, is cut off from said Territory and the benefits of local or other government, and said river operates as an impassable barrier, separating such portion from the rest of the Territory and rendering communication between the inhabitants of the two subdivisions almost impossible, thus depriving the inhabitants of the Territory north of said river of the benefits of local or territorial government; and

Whereas such inhabitants have their interests in common with the people of Utah and all their associations and dealings with the latter, and it is desired by them that said area north of said river be detached from Arizona and annexed to the State of Utah; and

Whereas such area is deprived of water and other resources by which alone it can be developed or become valuable, and its physical conditions are such that its future development either in population or wealth is impossible, and it can be used only for grazing purposes, so that its segregation from the counties and Territory of which it is now

wealth is impossible, and it can be used only for grazing purposes, so that its segregation from the counties and Territory of which it is now a part will prove of no disadvantage to them; and

Whereas the greater portion of the property, both real and personal, within such area is owned by the inhabitants of the State of Utah, and the value of the property within such section will not increase because of the scarcity of water and the absence of resources therein, and the greater portion of the property therein consists of cattle, horses, and sheep, which graze in Utah and within such section, crossing and recrossing the boundary line, so that it is impossible either for the State of Utah or the Territory of Arizona to obtain revenue by assessment or otherwise from such property; and

Whereas by reason of such area being isolated from the rest of the Territory of Arizona it is impossible to administer the laws of said Territory or enforce the criminal stratutes or the legal ordinances or provisions or preserve peace and order, as a result of which criminals rendezvous therein and obtain immunity from prosecution; and

Whereas such area by reason of its physical situation and of the interests of the people owning property therein should belong to the State of Utah, and its annexation to the State of Utah would be productive of the greatest good to all interests and would be of advantage to the people residing in and who are interested in said tract of land, the majority of said residents having petitioned the Congress of the United States to annex said tract to the State of Utah. Therefore be it Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Utah, and the governor concurring, That your honorable body be, and is hereby, asked and petitioned to enact the necessary legislation in order that the tract of country in Arizona Territory lying north of the Colorado River be annexed to and become a part of the State of Utah, and the making of said river the boundary line between the State of Utah and

E. W. ROBINSON, Speaker of the House. HENRY GARDNER, President of the Senate.

Approved January 27, 1909.

STATE OF UTAH, Office of the Scoretary of State, ss:

I. Charles S. Tingey, secretary of state of the State of Utah, do hereby certify that the foreging is a full, true, and correct copy of a certified copy of house joint memorial No. 1, approved January 27, 1909, as appears on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Utah, this 1st day of February, A. D. 1909.

[SEAL.]

Secretary of State.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 1, by D. H. He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Lewiston, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains, which was ordered to lie on the table.

WHEAT RAISING IN RED RIVER VALLEY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a statement from the American Society of Equity, relative to the cost of raising wheat in the Red River Valley. I ask that it be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 699), and that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 1,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 699, Sixtieth Congress, second session, "The Society of Equity gives figures showing the cost of raising wheat in the Red River Valley," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. HALE. I move that a letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the editor of the Literary Digest relative to expenditures in the navy, a copy of which I present, be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 698) and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20111) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," relative to gambling, bucket shops, and bucketing, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 930) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8918) to provide for the payment to certain Indians of Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, in North Dakota, for certain horses condemned and destroyed by the Bureau of Animal Industry in the years 1906 and 1907, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 931) thereon.

COURTS FOR TRIAL OF ENLISTED MEN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6252) to promote the administration of justice in the navy and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Perkins, Mr. Gallinger, and Mr. Tillman the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 7872) to promote the administration of justice in the navy, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR ALLISON.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I offer resolutions for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa submits resolutions and asks for their present consideration. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. William Boyd Allison, late a Senator from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tributes may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolu-tions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, the death of Senator Allison has removed from American public life a statesman everywhere recognized as among the greatest and most useful public servants of the past fifty years. His career will always be famous, not only because of the important questions with which he was associated, but also because his career in the Senate was longer than that of any other Senator in the history of the Government. If he had lived until the 4th of March he would have completed thirty-six years of uninterrupted service in this Chamber. Prior to his election to the Senate he had served eight years in the House of Representatives. With a break of only two years he served in Congress more than forty-three years. This unprecedented term of office not only gave to his later years an extraordinary influence in the leadership of national affairs, but made his old age venerable, surrounding him with the reverence of his colleagues and of all who were his coworkers in the administration of National Government. His character commanded the respect of all, and his personality attracted to him the good will and affection of all.

WILLIAM BOYD ALLISON was born at Perry, Ohio, March 2, 1829; so that at the time of his death, August 4, 1908, he was approaching 80 years of age. After completing his studies at the Western Reserve College, he began the practice of law at Ashland, Ohio, taking an active interest in politics and obtaining a fair measure of success in his profession. Before he had reached the age of 30 years, however, he made up his mind that a better chance for distinction and success could be found in the West, and accordingly he joined the great procession which was moving toward the new States beyond the Mississippi. He resumed the practice of law at Dubuque, Iowa, in 1857, and immediately came to the front as a leader in all the affairs of that thriving little city. He was recognized by his neighbors as a man of unusual gifts and attainments. The same qualities that gave to his later years such grace and charm of manner surrounded his early manhood with a widening circle of friends and friendly influence. He was a delegate in the convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. When the civil war came on, a friend and neighbor of his youth in Ohio, Samuel J. Kirkwood, became governor of Iowa.

Mr. Allison was already engaged in organizing a regiment when the old war governor sent for him and pressed upon him his duty to aid the State in the military preparations, which were everywhere in progress, by accepting a special assignment on the executive's staff. Senator Allison was often heard to express his regret that he did not have the opportunity to take the field with the troops which he organized, but the record of the adjutant-general's office at Des Moines shows that he rendered the country an invaluable service in doing, with painstaking care, the work which was given him to do. So universal was the recognition of his public service that the old Dubuque district chose him as its Representative in the Thirtyeighth Congress. This election to Congress brought him to the capital in the midst of the struggle for the national life. He at once took up the hard problems with which the Government had to deal in supporting its armies and caring for the public interests connected with its administration. He was, from his entrance into the House of Representatives, a leader in that great popular assembly. He devoted himself with untiring energy to the practical questions with which the legislation of those days was concerned. His favorite studies related to the collection and disbursement of the public revenues and to the intricate problems of finance with which the Government was face to face every day.

He was a quiet, patient worker and student, and those who remember him at that period of his public life have borne testimony that his rise in influence in the House of Representatives was steady and continuous from the beginning. It has been truly said that the House of Representatives subjects its Members to an ordeal so severe that no man can join the company of its leadership without the unquestioned possession of the talents and habits of mind which such a position exacts. the first term of his service, Mr. Allison commended himself to his colleagues as a man fit for the highest responsibilities of the House, and in his second term he was appointed a member of the Ways and Means Committee, which at that time, even more than it does now, dominated the proceedings of the This position also gave him the opportunity to lay the foundation of that profound knowledge of the revenue system of the United States which made him an authority on that and kindred subjects in this body.

A single illustration will show the general character of the work which engaged his attention. He was the author—in so far as one man may be said to be the author of a great public policy-of the reform in the internal-revenue laws of the United States by which the tax on spirits was delivered from the frauds which for many years had almost extinguished that source of income, by making its collection both burdensome and unmanageable. His scheme for the administration of the internal-revenue system, while it has been frequently modified in minor particulars by subsequent legislation, remains until this day substantially as he framed it.

The conspicuous influence of Mr. Allison in the House of Representatives gave him such universal popular favor in Iowa that at the end of eight years he declined renomination in order to become a candidate for Senator. He represented the ambitions of the younger men of the State, and his entrance into the field as a candidate was in the nature of a challenge to the political management which had long controlled the politics of the State. He was compelled to carry on his campaign under many disadvantages, and while he did not succeed in his ambition, he established so wide an acquaintance and gained so firm a hold on the public good will that his friends counted his defeat as only a temporary reverse, and did not hesitate to present his name as a candidate two years later against James Harlan, then the most famous and influential western man in public This political battle has been ever since memorable in Iowa politics, and when it ended in the election of Senator Allison it marked the beginning of a political era with which his name and fame will always be associated in the history of

I desire now to say a few words about the personal characteristics which enabled this young man, without money or influential connections, to overthrow the formidable political influences which surrounded Senator Harlan, supported, as he was, by the administration at Washington, of which he was in some respects the most famous and honored champion in the Senate of the United States. In the first place, it need hardly be said that the people of Iowa recognized Senator Allison's fine equipment and preparation for public affairs. In the next place, he had the peculiar qualities of mind and heart which inspired among the younger men of the State a personal allegiance which followed him all the days of his life. His approach to the people had in it a kindliness of manner and of speech which gave him access to the hearts of men and made them feel that he took an interest in their welfare and appreciated their support. In all this there was no affectation; it was the natural expression of his character. The same qualities which the young men of Iowa found in him at the beginning of his career kept him near to the people throughout his political life. He never failed in helpful counsel to those who were seeking a foothold in public affairs. He encouraged the younger men to press forward to the goal of their ambitions. With him it was a privilege, as well as a duty, to help others.

In the long list of those who have represented the various Iowa districts in the House of Representatives since he left it, there has not been one who did not look up to Senator Allison as a friend and helper in his work. During the long period in which he presided over the Iowa delegation he invariably effaced himself and his own plans in his desire to aid his colleagues and to give them a share of the prestige and recognition belonging to the public service. It is not a common thing to refer to such a matter on an occasion like this, and yet there ought to be a public record made of it, that in his Senatorial career he never sought to control the appointment of any man to an office. He regarded his colleagues in the House of Representatives as his constituents as well as representatives of each community within the State, and so when the appointment of an Iowa man to any office within the gift of the President was sought, the request came not from him, but from the whole delegation. with such a nice sense of fairness and justice were the offices divided among the congressional districts that every portion of the State found itself represented, and every Member of Congress came to feel that Senator Allison had no interest at stake in the distribution of official positions except the public welfare and the peace and harmony of the political party of which he was the leader.

It is an interesting and unique circumstance that throughout his period of service in the Senate he exercised in our local politics, in addition to his own vote in the conference of the delegation, only that influence which arose from the belief of his colleagues that his motives in the guidance of their affairs were absolutely free from selfish interest. It is certain that this characteristic of his leadership gave to Senator Allison a place in the general good will of our people which not even the infirmities of age and the near approach of death were able to disturb. It is certain, also, that the relation which he assumed toward those with whom he was associated in public duties was responsible for that freedom from personal contention which he enjoyed throughout his public life, and which in a certain sense released his energies from the petty disputes of politics and enabled him to give to his public duties an unen-cumbered attention. He was happily situated. His reelections to the Senate came to him as a matter of course, without dissent, and without controversy. The State of Iowa was free from a great variety of disputed questions about Indians, public lands, forest reservations and similar matters, which take up so much of the time of Congress.

And so it came about that the larger business of the Government was never out of his mind, until at length he was looked upon everywhere as the master of the practical details of legislation without a rival in this body. Other men were more eloquent than he; others possibly were more deeply versed in the subtleties of constitutional interpretation; but when it came to the real conduct of the Government, the raising of its revenues, and their expenditure, the Senate and the country turned in-stinctively to Senator Allison. We sometimes think that the proceedings of Congress are all set down in the daily RECORD. So far as what is said is concerned, that is partly true of the House and altogether true of the Senate, but behind these daily proceedings, when great issues are at stake, upon which the opinions of men are divided, the real proceedings of Congress lie outside of the RECORD, in those interchanges of opinion which gradually mold into form the propositions which at length find their way into the statute book.

The most obvious thing about Senator Allison's biography is the fact that his most valuable service, the service which enabled the party to which he belonged to go forward in the discharge of its responsibility to the country with a certain measure of unity, was not put down in any written record, but belongs to those hours of fruitful consultation, where the wisdom of the old leader was proved equal to every emergency. was because it bore this relation to our public affairs that in his public utterances, in debate, and in speeches before the people he avoided dogmatism even in its most attractive forms, and made room in the expression of his opinions for those differences which he knew would be encountered sooner or later, giving leeway for composing those disagreements which he knew must be composed before anything could be actually done. He was sometimes the object of satire in the press, and even on this floor—a mild satire which he enjoyed as much as anybody else—because he withheld the final statement of what he desired to have done until he had completed the task of bringing the conflicting opinions of the Senate to some proposition upon which a majority could agree.

In that task, imposed upon him by common consent of his colleagues, he would have been a failure if he had begun by advertising what he intended to do and by disparaging the views and suggestions of everybody else. And so it happened that he lost the renown that belongs to a certain type of statesmanship in gaining the influence which enabled him to bring order out of every chaos of legislation, and thus to carry forward the work of Congress. Thus it happened that while everybody has understood in a general way the value of Senator Allison's labors in the Senate, only those who have been familiar with the mechanism of our Government and the difficulties that lie across the path of every great proposal of legislation have given him the full credit as a statesman to which he is entitled in the distribution of honors in the arena of legislative activity. There are upon the statute books a good many laws which bear, in popular parlance, the name of some reputed author. Yet it requires very little knowledge of the course of legislation to see how insecure such a title to fame actually is, for there is no statute of importance which does not bear upon it the marks of the labors of many men, and when it is named for anyone it is usually for mere convenience rather than for a more substantial reason. Oftentimes the real authors of the measure, those who have given the most effective attention to its framing and its enactment, are overlooked altogether. It was a peculiar trait of Senator Allison that while every important act of Congress for a whole generation has had the benefit of his judgment and bears the evidences of his legislative skill, yet he was never overanxious to put his own name on any of them, or even to divide with others the passing celebrity of their authorship.

Early in his senatorial service it came within the line of his duty to frame the present government of the District of Columbia, on principles that have not only worked well here, but have become the basis of a reform in municipal government which now promises to be general throughout the United States. few citizens of the District, even among those whose memories go back to the time when the District government was operated for the benefit of contractors and local politicians, ever think of Senator Allison in connection with the reform which made the modern city of Washington possible. Few men, even among those who have written histories of the transaction, connect the name of Senator Allison with the act of Congress for the resumption of specie payments; yet, although he was among the younger Members of the Senate, he was one of a subcommittee which framed that act, and his knowledge of the subject was so generally appreciated in the Senate that he was appointed a member of the Finance Committee and given a potent voice in its deliberations from that time on. There were few men in either House of Congress who gave to the coinage question a profounder study than he; but it is not generally known that we owe to him more than to any other man the adoption of those measures which saved the United States from the uncertainties which would have followed the free coinage of silver, at a time when the majority of both Houses of Congress were committed to that experiment.

In more recent years, as a member of the Committee on Finance, Senator Allison occupied a foremost place among the leaders who have shaped the financial and industrial policy of the Government. His labors in the Senate, while including practically every subject with which Congress has had to deal, were confined mainly to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Finance. He became a member of the former when he entered the Senate, while his services on the Finance Committee dates from the Forty-fifth Congress. In 1881 he became chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and in that position his most significant public service was rendered. That great committee, especially in these later years, has not only had to do with the national budget, but the pressure upon the time of Congress has so increased that the appropriation bills have often carried far-reaching acts of legislation affecting the greatest possible variety of subjects. It was in the work of that committee that Senator Allison was most at home. The late Senator Hoar says of him in his Autobiograph of Seventy Years:

He has controlled more than any other man, indeed, more than any other ten men, the vast and constantly increasing public expenditures, amounting to more than a thousand millions annually. It has been an economical and wise expenditure. That is a knowledge in which nobody else in the Senate, except Senator Hale of Maine and Senator Cockrell of Missouri, can compare with him.

But the business of the Appropriations Committee did not by any means absorb all his energies. Senator Allison was a student of our tariff problems throughout his public life, and for accuracy of knowledge and painstaking research no statesman of his time outranks him. Among all the numerous changes which have taken place in the tariff laws during the last thirty years it may be with truth said that the hand of Senator Allison is seen in every one. He was a member of the subcommittee which prepared the tariff law of 1883. The historic revision of 1890, which gave to William McKinley a parliamentary renown hardly overshadowed by the presidential office, was more truly the work of the Finance Committee of the Benate than of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. In the previous Congress, after the Mills bill had passed the House, it was referred in the Senate committee to a subcommittee, of which Senator Allison was the chairman. The whole bill, in form and in substance, was recast, and a Senate substitute prepared under Senator Allison's immediate direction, with arduous labor lasting far into the summer, approved by the Committee on Finance and reported to the Senate by Senator Allison. That measure became the basis upon which General Harrison's campaign for the Presidency was made. It was debated in the Senate until the adjournment of Congress in October, and in the session after the presidential election Senator Allison's substitute for the Mills bill passed the Senate. So that when the new Congress convened in the December following, the Ways and Means Committee had before it the tariff bill which, with only minor alterations, passed into history as the McKinley law of 1890.

In the same Congress, the law reforming the customs administration, framed by a subcommittee of which Senator Allison was chairman, was reported to the Senate, and under his guidance passed this body—first as an independent measure and afterwards as a part of the Senate substitute for the Mills bill. In the Fifty-first Congress Mr. McKinley introduced the measure with a few unimportant changes. It passed the House; the Senate restored it to the exact form in which Senator Allison had framed it, and it is known now as the administrative customs act of 1890. It will be seen, therefore, that the credit, in a just measure, of laying the foundation of the existing administrative system applicable to our internal taxation, and to our customs revenue as well, belongs to Senator Allison. His incomparable genius for legislation was exhibited even after his failing strength began to admonish him that the night was coming when no man can work. He probably never set himself to a more difficult or a more important task than when, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, after the pending amendment to the interstate commerce law had torn the Senate into contending factions, filling the country with all forms of clamor and suspicion, the old leader, in broken health, but with faculties unimpaired, brought Congress to a realization of its duty, and, with-out sacrificing the convictions of any Senator, united all parties and all factions in the passage of that great measure.

We may not doubt that there will be occasions in the future when the Senate will need the counsel and guidance of Senator Allison. But it is not too much to believe that the lessons of toleration and respect for the opinions of others which are taught in the life of this great American statesman will never lose their influence in the Government of the United States. For, after all, it is not of the exploits of a parliamentary leader, nor the achievements of an experienced legislator, that we are thinking to-day. It is rather the quiet, courtly life he lived among us, the helpful things he did, the gentle and gracious words he used to speak, which are in our hearts at this hour and will be kept in our memories while we live. Already the Senate, departing from the custom of a long time, has directed that a picture of him shall be hung in a corridor of the Capitol by the side of the favorite statesmen of other generations.

The people of Iowa who followed him with loving confidence

The people of Iowa who followed him with loving confidence for nearly half a century, even down to the valley of the shadow of death, will build a monument to him within the borders of the State which gave him his high commission, and will ask permission to erect a statue here, that the affection and reverence of the Nation which gave a crown of peculiar glory to his old age may have a permanent expression in the Capital where the great work of his life was done.

Mr. HALE. It is not difficult, Mr. President, to make a proper estimate of the character and public service of the late Senator from Iowa, for the reason that, high as was that character and remarkable as was his public service, all his great contributions to legislation and his protracted service and continuous unfaltering labor, with their marked and influential results, were open as the day.

Senator Allison's temperament and his connection with the great working committees in both Houses of Congress, in each of which he had long service, brought him to the consideration of every really important question and subject which from year to year has interested the American people. He dealt with all these questions in a plain, straightforward way, and brought to the task of maturing wise legislation unbounded good sense, fidelity of purpose, and a capacity for sustained labor such as no other man whom I have personally known in public life in either House has ever possessed.

There was nothing sensational in his nature. He was not excitable. He was not vain or egotistic. He never sought to attract public attention. He never posed for the galleries. I do not think, in his very long service, that he ever once gave notice that on a selected day he would make a speech; but, from the beginning of his career in Congress, he bent his whole mind and summoned all his energies to the thoughtful consideration of every question that arose involving the real interests of the American people. And, as the years passed, this character and temperament and this useful service made him more and more an authority in Congress until at last, and for long years in his later senatorial life, he stood without an equal or a rival as the arbiter and director in almost every field of legislation.

His term of service in the two Houses, beginning in the middle of the civil war and extending from that with hardly a break for more than forty years, covered a period which witnessed the discussions and conflicts that arose over every great question which for half a century has interested and aroused the people of this Republic. The conduct of the great war, the reconstruction measures, the amendments to the Constitution, the restoration of the States, the financial policy of administrations and parties, the tariff, the currency, the intervention by the General Government into the business of corporations-upon all these, the fullest information was at the fingers' ends of the late Senator from Iowa. In any given emergency he knew better what to do and what could be done than any other Member of Congress or of any branch of the Government, and it was well for the Republic when his admonition and counsel were heeded and his mental processes were crystallized into the laws of the land.

He was a factor in the House of Representatives. He was the unquestioned leader in the Senate. He headed great commissions that investigated important subjects in foreign lands. He more than once declined service as a Cabinet officer at the head of leading departments, and he came very near to the Presidency. He had almost perfect equipment for that great place, and when he came so nigh and yet missed, his calm mind was never ruffled by his defeat, and no man, however near to him or how well he might know his incomings and outgoings, ever, either in action or speech, saw him influenced in his course by the memory of disappointment and failure. He would take all things as they came to him, whether of success or failure, and placidly abide the result. He knew how, as John Burroughs expresses it, "to serenely fold his hands and wait." His sterling qualities, joined with what I may call great

His sterling qualities, joined with what I may call great shrewdness and unbounded tact, kept him from making enemies, and yet preserved through his long life the increasing respect, regard, and affection of his friends.

What shall I say, Mr. President, about his other side? His generous heart, the "unexhausted kindliness which glowed like daily sunrise there," his patience, his charity, his magnanimity, and the love which he felt for the friends who were nearest and dearest to him, and the love which he inspired in turn from them.

Into this domain I can not enter far. An acquaintance, formed forty years ago, had ripened into what I believe was a real friendship between Senator Allison and me. I dwell with pleasure upon the years of this long attachment, but I realize, Mr. President, that on my side of that friendship there was fault, and that, I fear, too often. I waken in the night and turn on my pillow with the sad recollection of my inadequacy. I was not as kind and considerate and gentle as he, but his great mantle of charity covered my transgressions, and in his heart was a wellspring of forgiveness.

How we shall miss him all of us know. For me, I am sure that the remainder of my service will never be to me personally what it was when he was present. It can never be what it was when I was his companion and friend and he was my exalted and accepted leader.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, my acquaintance with Senator Allison began with my admission to the Senate over thirty-two years ago. He had then been a Member of the Senate for three years and had already earned for himself an enviable position in this body. I early learned to admire him for his strength of character and his many excellent qualities of mind and heart, and formed for him a sincere friendship, which continued unbroken until the day of his death in the lart, and formed for him a sincere friendship, which continued unbroken until the day of his death.

It will be but a feeble tribute that I shall pay to his memory to-day. I can only say a few words, which will in nowise express my feelings as to the loss sustained by this body and by the country at large in the death of this distinguished Senator.

WILLIAM BOYD ALLISON was born at Perry, Ohio, March 2, 1829. He attended the academy at Wooster, Ohio, two years, and spent one year at the once somewhat famous Allegheny College, Meadville, Pa. He commenced the study of law in 1848, and in 1850 was admitted to the bar. In 1856 he supported John C. Fremont for President, and in 1857 he removed to Dubuque, Iowa, and resumed the practice of law. He took an active part in politics, was a delegate to the Republican state convention of 1859, and was a delegate to the Republican national convention at Chicago in 1860.

He was appointed on Governor Kirkwood's staff at the commencement of the civil war and assisted in the organization of the Iowa volunteers. He was elected to the Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, and Forty-first Congresses. In 1870 he declined a nomination for Congress and became a candidate for the United States Senate, but he failed of an election; in 1872 he was a successful candidate against the Hon. James Harlan, and took his seat in the Senate March 3, 1873. He was reelected in 1878, 1884, 1890, 1896, and 1902. He received a majority of the votes of his party at a primary election in June, 1908, for reelection, and if he had lived would have been reelected. He served thirty-five years and five months continuously in the United States Senate, having been elected for thirty-six years, making a record for length of senatorial service never before equaled.

While a Member of the House of Representatives he took an active part in the legislation of that period, and in the Thirtyninth Congress he became a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. On his admission to the Senate, in 1873, he was assigned to the Committees on Appropriations, Indian Affairs, and Pensions. He was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Forty-fourth Congress (1875) and became a member of the Committee on Finance during the Forty-fifth Congress (1877).

He became chairman of the Committee on Appropriations during the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress (1881), and retained that position for twenty-six years, and was chairman of the committee at the time of his death, which occurred at Dubuque, Iowa, on the 4th of August, 1908, having been a member of that important committee for the entire period of his service in the Senate.

President Garfield tendered him the Treasury portfolio, which he declined, and the same position was offered him in 1888 by President Harrison, but he did not accept it.

President McKinley offered him the position of Secretary of State, but he declined this much-sought-after position in the public service, because he believed he could be of greater benefit to the people of his State and of the country at large in the chosen field of his life work—the Senate.

During his senatorial service he gave much consideration to financial questions. In 1878 he was a member of the Committee on Finance, and was influential in securing the passage of an act for the coinage of silver, usually denominated the "Bland-Allison Act."

In 1892 he was the chairman of the American delegates who attended the International Monetary Conference in Brussels, in which conference he took an active and important part, contending for the use of both gold and silver in the monetary system of the world, and while his services in that conference secured nothing for his contention, he demonstrated his knowledge of and acquaintance with the history of monetary affairs throughout the world, and his services were highly appreciated by both bimetallists and monometallists, especially of his own country. While he doubted the ability of the United States alone to restore silver to its former relations to gold, he believed it quite possible for that to be done by international agreement.

Although he was a bimetallist, when his party adopted in its platform at St. Louis in 1896 the gold standard, he accepted its determination and loyally supported its candidate for President with zeal and ability.

dent with zeal and ability.

His long service on the Committee on Appropriations and Finance made him familiar with the financial and economic conditions of the country, and at the time of his death he was an authority in the Senate on all questions concerning revenue and expenditures.

He was a firm believer in the doctrine of protection to American industries and American labor; he took an active part in the preparation and passage of all tariff laws that have been enacted since he entered public life, yet he was tolerant of those who differed with him on the subject and recognized in debate and otherwise that his opponents were actuated by the same patriotic sentiment in their opposition that he was in his support. He was kind and courteous in debate on all subjects, and his influence was felt on all subjects which he supported or opposed.

He was kind and considerate in his intercourse with his fellows. His death was a loss to the State he had honored by his service here and also to the Nation. It may be said of him, as Cicero said of another, "boni senatoris prudentia;" he had the wisdom of a good Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the judgment of contemporaries as to the estimate that should properly be placed upon the life and services of a public man may not be infallible; the lines of our perspective may be obscured by personal admiration or affection; but making allowance for this, we can,

I believe, feel sure that the future historian, having in view the record of his work and achievements, will give Senator Allison a place in the first rank of the statesmen of his time.

He was a master of the arts of conciliation and construction. Other men have been more brilliant in debate; others have been more frequently in the public eye; the work of others has appealed more strongly to the passions and sensibilities of men, but no one has left a greater impress upon the useful legislation of his generation than he. He had a wider and better knowledge than any of all parts of our governmental machinery, and he knew better than any what provision was necessary for its successful and efficient operation.

His active work in the Senate was largely in connection with the Committee on Appropriations, of which he was for so long the chairman. The character and magnitude of his work in this connection has been described by other Senators. ally I was more familiar with his service on the Committee on Finance. For twenty-seven years I was associated with him in the active work of that committee, of which he was always an influential member. These years of constant association and close companionship were to me the source of ever-present and unalloyed satisfaction and delight. Their memory will remain with me forever. During Senator Allison's membership he took a leading part in the preparation and discussion of all the legislation reported from the committee. Under his leadership early in his public career the internal-revenue laws, especially those in reference to the collection of the taxes upon distilled spirits, were thoroughly reconstructed. In association with the late Senator Beck and myself, he prepared the customs administrative bill of 1888, which became a law two years later, and which created a new organization and new methods for the collection of the revenue from customs. These two acts furnished, perhaps, the best evidence of the Senator's constructive ability. Senator Allison took a leading part in the preparation and enactment of the tariff laws of 1883, 1890, and 1897. I was associated with him for months in the labor of preparation of the tariff bill of 1888, which involved an entire reconstruction of the methods of classifying and imposing the duties upon customs, as well as a complete revision of the rates. This bill furnished the basis of the act of 1890, known as the "McKinley bill."

Senator Allison reported from the committee the national bank act of 1882, which made important changes in the system. He took an important part in all the financial legislation which was considered or adopted during his long service in the Senate. He was a leading member of the subcommittee that prepared and reported the gold standard act of 1900. He was a careful student of all these subjects and the wide range of his knowledge of all was remarkable.

I have presented but a brief outline of the Senator's invaluable services in connection with the important subjects referred to the Finance Committee, but the influence of the Senator upon the legislation of the Senate was not, by any means, confined to measures reported from the Committees on Appropriations or Finance. He gave to every question of importance pending in the Senate careful and thoughtful consideration, and his opinions on all were given great and controlling weight by his associates.

The wisdom of his judgment and his intelligent industry made him a leader of the Senate. An acknowledged leader, he never paraded his powers of leadership, and was apparently unconscious of their existence. His position in the Senate was unique; he was oldest in service, wisest in counsel, the friend and mentor of all. He was at all times genial and kind, considerate and helpful of others. No one came within the circle of his acquaintance without being attracted by the irresistible charm of his personality, which never faded. He was ever calm, patient, industrious. He was never aggressive or sensational in his methods, but always seeking through sensible measures to secure the best practical results.

Through the death of Senator Allison the Senate loses its foremost Member. The loss to the Senate and the country comes at a time when we can ill afford to be deprived of his wisdom and the benefit of his experience. Confronted with a rapidly increasing number of complex and important problems for solution, may we not hope that, while we mourn the loss of the counsel and assistance of our dear friend, the lessons of his life will incite us to greater efforts and inspire us with greater strength and faith to meet the exacting demands of the

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, when last a similar duty and privilege were mine, standing a few months ago in this place, I offered my feeble tribute to the memory of a young man 32 years of age whose service in the Senate had been of the brief space of less than two months.

To-day, when performing the same office for another, I lay my brief offering upon the bier of the veteran Senator who, when at the close of the last session of Congress he last passed without the doors of this Chamber, had reached the eightieth year of his age, and for more than thirty-five consecutive years had represented his State in the Senate. Strikingly remarkable indeed is the record of that service.

As has been already stated to-day, in its length it surpassed that of any other Senator from the foundation of the Government to the present day. But remarkable as is the number of years which, each as link joined to link, made up the lengthened term, the character of that service was even more noteworthy than was its unprecedented length.

Prepared by eight years of prior service in the House of Representatives, the records of his work show that immediately upon his entry into the Senate he began actively and efficiently the prosecution of labors which are usually undertaken by Senators only after the lapse of years of senatorial service. will not particularize as to his great career in the Senate during more than a third of a century; but it is safely within the facts to say that in the debates and in the final enactment of measures he strongly impressed his work upon every piece of important legislation which was enacted by Congress during the eventful period of his service here.

He was not quick to press himself to the front in the active debates in the Senate. Nevertheless in the final stages of almost every important controverted and difficult question, his were most frequently the words which in the end determined the fate of the measure, and, if successful, the shape it should finally bear; and when, as was often the case, his party associates were upon any question divided in their views and wishes, it was he who was looked to by them to find the acceptable ground upon which the factions finally united in harmonious action; and where no political question was involved, his influence in the shaping of legislation was as potential with Democratic Senators as it was with those of his own political faith. Confidence in his adamantine integrity, in his unswerving fidelity to the public interest, in his extended familiarity with all governmental affairs, and in the correctness of his well-poised judgment was as implicit and as manifest in its practical expression on this side of the Chamber as it was among his political fellows on the other side of the aisle.

In the full enjoyment of this well-earned and general confidence it is not to be wondered that he thus made his strong impress upon the important legislation of more than three and a half decades.

And yet, marked and notable as is this fact, if called upon to specify the most distinguishing feature in his remarkable senatorial career, I would not point to his connection with and influence upon the great legislative events of his day, each of which stands out in historic prominence, but I would say that this most distinguishing feature was found in his unostentatious, unwearied labor of thirty-five years, his devotion to that wide-reaching work, requiring continuous study, thought, and care, and exacting from him never-flagging industry, a labor prompted by an innate fidelity to duty so natural that in him it was unconscious—a labor guided by large experience and evenly balanced judgment, through which in large measure the complex, intricate, and vast machinery of this great Government has been during this long term of years kept in successful operation.

His mind and memory were a great storehouse of knowledge of the needs and resources of the Government, and the Senate at all times leaned upon him as upon a strong and all-sustaining staff. His relation to the Senate was that of the trusted pilot to the ship, with vision keen and hand unerring, guiding it past the sunken rocks and round the threatening shoals. through the deepening channel to the safe and restful harbor.

Before disease had laid its wasting hand upon him, Senator Allison was in his person unusually handsome and engaging. His figure was large and well proportioned. His head was massive and shapely. His features were clear-cut, and in their expression there was the not to be mistaken evidence of both gentleness and strength, each in marked degree. His courtesy, both in debate and in personal intercourse, was unvarying. No one who knew him can forget the kindly eye and the ever-ready smile, the silent messengers which told of the tender and sympathetic heart within.

Mr. President, in the years of my association with him here I have never heard one Senator say of him an unkind, an ungenerous, or a harsh word. His memory is to each and all of us a cherished possession. We all loved him as a brother and we each venerated him as a father, and it is not a formal, but a heartfelt tribute of affection which we pay to him to-day.

Sir, in all these years I have been so accustomed to see him here that it is difficult for me to realize that I shall not again see his familiar form in this Chamber, and at times I almost again look for him to enter and take his accustomed seat, the second from the aisle. And who is there who does not in memory now see him walk from that seat across the front of the desk and out by that door which leads to the room of the Committee on Appropriations, the scene of his unremitting labors?

Mr. President, my term of service here has been short indeed when compared with his. And yet there are but 12 Senators now members of the body who were here when my first term began, and on March 4 that number will be reduced to 10. Many of those who have gone from among us still survive and are engaged in other fields, but not a few of them shall be no more seen of men. As we look around, memory again places them in their accustomed seats and again brings back to us the echoes of the familiar voices of the men with whom, since my brief service, we have labored and associated here.

Allison, Voorhees, Sherman, Harris of Tennessee, Walthall, Morrill, George, Hoar, Gear, Vest, Gibson, Hawley, Palmer, White of California, Whyte of Maryland, Platt of Connecticut, Gordon, Gorman, Proctor, Jones of Arkansas, Morgan, Wolcott, Sewell, Pettus, Hanna, Mitchell of Wisconsin, McMillan, Davis of Minnesota, Mallory, Shoup, Earle, Bate, Caffery, Vilas, Bryan, Latimer, and Carmack.

Long indeed is the lengthening list of those who in the mists of the vanishing years beckon us on to the shadowy land.

We are such stuff As dreams are made on; and our little life Is rounded with a sleep.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, to speak the praises of the late distinguished Senator from Iowa, with whom I served in Congress for thirty-two years, is to me a labor of gratitude and Senator Allison, whose death we are commemorating to-day, was an American citizen of the very highest type. For half a century he stood before the country as one of the foremost statesmen, a man of perfect moral proportions, and one of whose integrity, honesty, and purity of purpose there was never either private or public question.

His career was remarkable in the annals of our public lifeindeed I am not sure but that in many respects it was the most remarkable career of any statesman in our history. Away back in 1855 a delegate to the Ohio state convention, presided over by John Sherman, that nominated Salmon P. Chase for governor of Ohio; an active supporter of Fremont in 1856; a delegate and one of the secretaries of the convention of 1860 that nominated Abraham Lincoln for President; Representative in Congress; Senator almost ever since; his public life forms a complete legislative history of the United States for nearly fifty years, and was coincident with the life of the Republican party from its very beginning.

I first became acquainted with Senator Allison on becoming a Member of Congress in 1865. He had preceded me one term, and, although only at the beginning of his second term, he was made a member of the great Committee on Ways and Means, and I found that even then he was regarded as among the ablest and most influential of the western Members. once became friends, and it is a pleasure for me to think that the friendship formed forty-five years ago continued until his death.

There was never a more momentous period in our history than in the dark days of 1863, when Senator Allison entered Congress. The civil war was raging, there had been no decisive Union victories, the battle of Gettysburg had not been fought, and it was thought that the fate of the Union was trembling in the balance (although I never myself believed that it was written in the book of fate that this Union should be dissolved); we were a divided Nation, sorely afflicted, passing through a baptism of fire and blood. He lived to see the Union saved, the Nation cemented more closely together than ever, to see the country which he had served so long and so well increase threefold in population and wealth, and take a foremost place among the nations of the world.

Senator Allison's conspicuous service in the House, as I recollect it, and as the records show, pertained principally to appropriations and finance, the refunding of the debt, reduction of internal taxation, revision of the tariff, and kindred legislation.

From the very beginning of his congressional career he made a specialty of matters pertaining to finance, and he finally became one of the recognized authorities on financial questions.

He was not a high-tariff advocate. The sentiment in Iowa, just as in Illinois, was not in favor of a high tariff. Hence it was that during my service in both the House and Senate I was always glad to work in harmony with Senator Allison in reference to all matters pertaining to the tariff.

It has been said that Senator Allison was a conservative, if I might term it as such, all his life, and so he was in a sense. During his younger years, however, as a Member of the House, he was not the quiet, conservative man, never saying an unkind word in reference to anyone, that he was after he came to the Senate. Indeed, on some occasions in the House he was notably aggressive.

He was specially bitter toward President Johnson. I remember very well his speech on the violation of the tenure-of-office act and the bitterness with which he attacked President John-His language on that occasion was such that those who knew him intimately here would scarcely believe he was capable of uttering it. He denounced President Johnson in unmeasured terms, and urged that he be impeached and removed from office; that unless he was removed, his usurpations would continue until the republican government itself would be destroyed and on its ruins a dictatorship established in the interest of the worst enemies of liberty and law.

But to remain cool and calm in those days of bitterness was more than could be expected of human nature.

One can scarcely realize now the intense feeling prevailing in Congress in those days. The great President had just been laid low by what was thought to be a conspiracy on the part of some of the southern leaders. Mr. Allison supported, as I did, the impeachment of Mr. Johnson. We were wrong. There was no conspiracy on the part of the South to assassinate Mr. Lincoln. And in later years I know Senator Allison often said it would have been one of the greatest mistakes in our history to have removed President Johnson.

Mr. President, I will be pardoned for dwelling on Senator Allison's service in the House, because his really great career commenced when he entered this body in 1873. My excuse is that there are many here, in fact all of us, who knew him more or less intimately as a Senator, but there are so few, so very few, who remember him as a Member of the House, and it so happens that I am the only Member of either House who served with Senator Allison in the Fortietl. Congress and voted for the impeachment of President Johnson.

WILLIAM B. ALLISON'S career as a Senator is history. The history of our financial legislation since 1873 could not be written without there appearing on every page, as a dominating factor, the name of Allison.

When I entered this body in 1883 he was already a leader, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which posi-tion, I believe, he occupied longer than any other Senator in our history. Not only did he bear the great burden imposed upon him as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but Not only did he bear the great burden imposed for many years he was one of the two leading members of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Rhode Island being the other. All during his public service I never knew him to be wrong on public questions. He was always a safe man to

As has been stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Tel-LER], he was a member of the International Monetary Conference of 1892 and was desirous of settling the so-called "silver question" harmoniously between the two parties, if it could be settled, but, nevertheless, he was a firm believer in the gold standard. When others faltered, when even the late President McKinley doubted, he stood firm for the gold standard, and subsequent history has proved that his judgment was correct. I do not suppose anyone will now seriously question the service he rendered his country in saving it from free silver in 1877. He was a leading factor in the resumption of specie payment, in the framing of every tariff law from 1877 to and including the Dingley Act, in the establishment of the gold standard, thus carrying out the party's pledge of 1896. His senatorial record has been fully given by his colleague.

He was a wise man. He had an extraordinary control over Members in settling troublesome questions and bringing about harmony in the Senate. He had wonderful influence not only with Members of his own party, but with Members of the opposition. Everyone had confidence in him. His statements were accepted without question.

He never attempted oratory, but by cool, logical argument he molded the opinions of legislators. He was one of those evenmoded the opinions of registators. He was one of those even-tempered, level-headed, sound, sensible men to whom we natu-rally turned when there were difficult questions to settle. We all had confidence in his judgment, and his integrity of purpose was never doubted.

He realized the growth of the Nation and its growing necessities, and appropriated accordingly.

Senator Allison was repeatedly offered Cabinet positions, probably more often than any other man in public life. Gar-field and Harrison both urged him to accept the Secretaryship of the Treasury. Mr. McKinley desired that Senator Allison should become a member of his Cabinet, but he declined, as he had so often declined it before. The fact was, Mr. President, he preferred to remain in the Senate. He found the work here far more congenial to his tastes than the work of any other

I always doubted whether he cared very much even for the Presidency. On several occasions his friends had urged him for the nomination, and on one occasion, at least, it seemed almost certain that he would be the nominee.

His failure to secure the office of President never seemed to trouble him in the slightest particular. If he felt any disappointment, which I do not believe he did, he never showed it.

Mr. President, Senator Allison took a keen interest in all our national legislation, and there was not a great measure passed in the Senate during his term of service that did not receive his careful consideration, and, indeed, his genius for suggesting happy compromises was instrumental in securing the passage of important legislation entirely apart from finance or appropriations. It was Senator Allison who suggested to me in 1886 the necessity for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the question of the regulation of interstate carriers, which resulted in the passage of the original act to regulate commerce, and it so happened, as Senators well remember, it was Senator Allison who, during the last Congress, proposed the compromise which resulted in the passage of the Hepburn Act, perfecting the original act. I only give this as an illustration of his influence in shaping general legis-

He was the trusted adviser of President after President-Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Harrison, McKinley, and Roosevelt all called upon him. I do not suppose there was another Senator who had to a greater extent their confidence. During the critical period preceding the Spanish-American war, and during the war, he was constantly advising with Mr. McKin-ley, and later President Roosevelt followed the wise example of his predecessor, and he would have been, had he lived, the confidant of the President-elect, Mr. Taft, who, since his death, has said that Mr. Allison was a warm friend of his father, and during his own public life he consulted him as a son would his father.

Senator Allison served longer in the Senate than any other man in all our history. He broke Benton's thirty-year record, thought extraordinary at the time. He broke the long record of the late Senator Morrill. Senator Morrill served twelve years in the House and thirty-one years and nine months in the Senate, making a total continuous service in Congress of forty-three years and nine months. Senator Allison served eight years in the House and thirty-five years in the Senate, making a total of forty-three years and five months, but a few months shorter than Senator Morrill's total service in both Houses.

He was a member of the Ways and Means Committee when Senator Morrill was its chairman. He was a member of the Finance Committee when Senator Morrill was its chairman, and could have succeeded him.

They resembled each other not only in point of service and in the peculiar nature of their service, but also in their kindly, agreeable dispositions. But, unlike the veteran Senator from Vermont, whose old-time ideas of powers and duties of the Government made him hesitate to follow his party when it advanced upon what he regarded as new paths, the late senior Senator from Iowa was always fully abreast of the times and was willing to follow his party even though it might take what the more conservative would regard as an advanced position. Senator Allison took a leading part in framing the policies of the Republican party and, while not an offensive partisan, was always a strict party man. Even though he was conservative, he did not hesitate to follow his party to the full extent in the policy of expansion. Indeed the only case within my recollection when he voted against the almost solid Republican majority in the Senate was on the ship-subsidy bill, when Senator Allison and Senator Spooner, followed by their two colleagues. very much to the surprise of every one, opposed the bill.

It has been said that the late Senator from Iowa was an embodiment of American legislative history for half a century. He was the colleague of many of the great men of the Republic—Sumner, Conkling, Morton, Trumbull, Thurman, Harrison, McKinley. He entered public life with Garfield and Blaine and remained a stalwart worker in the forum of politics years after Garfield reached the goal of his highest ambition, only to fall by the hand of an assassin, and until long after James G. Blaine had retired to private life and passed away. brilliant statesmen all passed to the beyond, while he still wore the toga of senatorial dignity when death's message came to him.

Along the course of his career from his early life, devoted to the practice of the law, to the call of the people of his district in Congress and to the close of his public life, his was not the showy brilliancy of a Douglas, a Blaine, a Conkling, a McKinley, but the steady, quiet life of the industrious, useful worker and successful legislator.

In the community in which he lived in the State of his adoption, which would have continued him in the service as long as he was willing to serve, in the House of Representatives, in the Senate, in every relation in life in which he was called upon to serve a part, everywhere and under all circumstances he was respected for his abilities and honored for his service.

He was laid to rest in-

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, a guide, a counselor, and a leader-so to speak, a father in Israel-has left us in the vanished form of William B. Allison, to whom we had become so accustomed that his presence seems to abide. He was a great Senator, even as he was a good citizen and a noble American. He gave his first fruits and the best fruits of his life to his people and his country. He left no enemies here. We looked upon him with friendship, and everyone found in him a friend. He was born at Perry, Ohio, March 2, 1829. He died at his home in Dubuque, Iowa, on the 4th day of August, 1908, in the eightieth year of his age.

At that time the Monetary Commission of the United States were en route to Europe, and several hundred miles distant from New York the wireless telegraph brought them the gloomy and regretted news of Mr. Allison's death.

His career as a public servant had been very long and very laborious. It was of an inestimable value to his State and to his country. The plain recital of his faculties and performances would comprise the most fitting and enduring monument of his great career.

As for myself, I shall go but lightly into details, but they have been and will be better recited by others.

I served, however, with Mr. Allison as a colleague on both the Appropriations and Finance committees. He was a master on their business. I have had the opportunity of years to observe his course in the Senate, and I have an abiding sense of his commendable character and of his great and well-nigh unexampled service.

He possessed a strong, ripe, well-trained, and apprehensive mind. His form was comely and manly and his countenance handsome and engaging. His face was illumined by kindly eyes of brilliance and power. His appearance betokened the modest, dignified, and forceful gentleman, unobtrusive, but inspiring respect and repelling undue familiarity. A stranger might naturally assume from looking at him what he equally was-a statesman. Well ordered in all his sayings and doings, he might have made a mistaken impression on those who knew him not, that he had more placidity of temper than of fire in

The well-built and well-oiled engine makes the least noise, because of its well-fitted mechanism and the superiority of its workmanship, but it is the most precise and continuous in its The fire that moves it scatters the fewest sparks and cinders if it be made of the best fuel. The sheen of marble and steel are not indications that it is soft and impressible. On the contrary, it is only the outward expression of strong fiber and power. It requires the most powerful instrumentality of art to hew the stone and to make and temper the steel that possess the finest polish. So in Allison the repression of contentious words and ways and the observance at all times of the amenities of life in all things were only the outward demonstration of the great heart, the good sense, and firm will that controlled him.

After his education at the Western Reserve College in Ohio, and after studying law and practicing his initial years in that State, he moved to Iowa in 1857, when a well-equipped young man 27 years of age.

When the civil war came on he served on the governor's staff, but was ere long translated to Congress, where he found the field that befitted his equipment and the bent of his genius. For four terms he was a Representative; that is to say, in the Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, Fortieth, and Forty-first Con-gresses. He then was elected to the Senate for the term beginning March 4, 1873, and was five times reelected, the last time for the term which, were he living, would expire on the 3d of March next.

Thus it is indicated that for a period of over forty years Mr. Allison was identified with the most critical and yet the most achieving and progressive period of American history. was no great measure of all that time in which he did not take an active part.

Several times his name was favorably commended for the Presidency of the United States. No man of his time was better qualified by information or devotion to duty, by dignity of character, or by the fine balance of mind and disposition to fill that great office in the spirit of the true American citizen.

True, he was a partisan. The nature of our people and of the institutions they have established has made partisanship the standing rule. We are all partisans. Marshall as well as Adams or Jefferson, Taney as well as Jackson, and Chase as well as Lincoln were all partisans; but when they gave decisions it was soon, if not instantly, recognized that they spoke the law as they found it and nothing but the law. The transient assault on Taney, made in times of great commotion and perturbation, left him unscathed as soon as he was understood. The tribute not long since paid to him by Mr. Justice Brewer marks both the recipient and the bestower of praise as men uplifted above all pettiness and all condescension that would lower the standard of rightfulness and law. A truehearted partisan, who has the balance of conscience and justice, may be trusted, whether upon the bench or in executive office or in legislative council.

WILLIAM B. ALLISON had such an equitable mind that he would have made a great chancellor had he been a judge, a great minister had he been called to the Cabinet, and in the executive chair none would have been surer to consider his country and all its people first-all other things second.

Allison was a man of peace and a great peacemaker. He instinctively observed the wise admonition of Allen G. Thurman. to "keep a civil tongue in his mouth." He avoided the sharp and bitter angles of speech as well as of practical affairs in life. It was axiomatic with the ancients that the middle way is the safe way. It is the wise way, the way that least tires the traveler, and the way that least breaks axles and harness and wheels. The most experienced and best lawyers have always settled their cases, when they could, out of court, not in it. It was laughingly said of a certain statesman that he was so prone to compromise that if a claimant demanded both the Capitol and Library, he would compound by saying, take the Library and leave us the Capitol." Allison was not that kind or any other kind of a weakling. When he stood for a principle to which he was devoted, he was as firm as a rock and believed that God Almighty hates a quitter.

Our Government is so vast and varied in its ramifications, its finances and its expenditures are upon so prodigious a scale, the increase of its population has been so unprecedented, its Representatives in Congress and its Senators and the details of their enormous work have been so multiplied, that conditions have forced comprehensive changes in its methods of administration. Government by committee has necessarily superseded in practical effect the government of earlier days, where de-bates were largely at will and any subject might be made one of prolonged discussion.

ALLISON was a great administrator. As chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and as a member of the Finance Committee, he constantly displayed his great utility, his capacity to work, his patience in hearing, in studying, in analyzing and clarifying details. His kind regard for all men and all questions were unsurpassed by any man I have ever known.

As a debater he wasted no time in his utterances, but was always ready and equal to any task that the contingencies of the floor of the Senate required. When he expounded a subject and advocated a theory he left little to be said by those who concurred and nothing to be assailed save that side which marks the line of fixed political demarcation. Of a fixed and stendfast purpose, he was never frivolous or fickle; but always possessing the poise and the gentle arts of good nature, he pursued with an unbroken pace the things he aimed at with the serenity of the spirit undisturbed by diverting circum-stances. Like the unclouded day, the rays of his intellect and of his information went forth to the world around him in temperate life-giving beams.

Moderation and patience were his masterful virtues. They are not the swiftest coursers in the chariot race, but they are the surest footed, the strongest, and the most dependable in the vast majority of the affairs of nations and of men. Neither the individual nor the social body can find verifiable progress without them. They wreck no trains; they cut down no trees to get at the fruit. They do not break banks nor burn candles at get at the fruit. They do not break banks nor burn candles at both ends; they join no "get-rich-quick" societies. They bury no armies in Russian snows, they bring on no revolutions, and they stir no schisms. They excite no hatred, but always allay it. They may not shine in the meteoric splendor that departs as it illumines, but they do the great and wholesome business of man's existence. They spread the ample board; they provide food and raiment; they store the fuel that makes summer by the hearthstone of the winter time. Like the sun again, you may not see it move, but it is moving all the same, and when the day is done it has done its work of vitality and cheer over the wide landscape. These be virtues, the signal virtues moderation and patience, which are most of all things to be commended and cultivated in a great republic, for the republic, of all forms of government, is the most quickly affected by the transient gusts of public opinion.

Mr. Bryce has said in his great work on our Commonwealth that "America is the country where everything turns out better than it ought to." We have broken all precedents in our marvelous career, but as land diminishes and population increases, as congested cities beckon the country boys and girls to their excitements and adventures, the infertile countrysides are the more and more deserted. Great problems of all sorts arise before us and spectral shapes give menace and admonition. In such a period more men of the temperate mind and balance of judgment, like Allison, are needed. While he adhered strictly to party, his influences within the lines of his party, and so spreading outward, were always exerted for concili-atory and for constructive and practical ends, and its own action was restrained from yielding to the temptations of popular and attractive things untested.

Our federative union is the greatest experimental station in affairs political that the world has ever seen or devised. It is because the State is a separate experimental station to itself, and may at will try any one of the great body of suggested ideas which are generated in the active minds of a progressive people. Sometimes the experiment in a State is wonderfully successful, and then the new idea is seized and considered and adopted by other States and becomes a fixed and shining light for the Nation. Sometimes the idea is disappointing, and then it soon passes away into rubbish. Whether we improve our own splendid mechanism of government or not, America will remain in future what it has been in the past-the name of opportunity.

I have not spoken of political differences of opinion with Mr. Allison; it was needless. Without some such differences of opinion progress would stagnate and such reforms as are wise and just would become the death heads of lost opportunity. But in our differences we shall best make ourselves the soldiers of the common weal and best advance our country and all its people by adopting the moderate and patient philosophy for which Allison above all men was distinguished. Thus shall our country develop in wholesome peace. Thus will it ever be ready for the demands of righteous war, and thus may we fulfill the ideals of our fathers and meet the expectations of those who succeed us upon the stage of action. In such wise, and in such wise alone, can we best serve America that her fair form-

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a short time ago, in the house of a friend in New York, I picked up a little book and opened it at this passage:

It is hard-

Said the doctor sadly-but life holds many hard things for all of us. Perhaps if we lived rightly, if our faith were stronger, death would not rend our hearts as it does. It is the common lot, the universal leveler, and soon or late it comes to us all. It remains to make our spiritual adjustment accord with the inevitable fact. * * The discord and the broken string of the individual instrument do not affect the whole except as false notes; but I think that God, knowing all things, must discern the symphony, glorious with meaning, through the discordant fragments that we play.

Mr. President, at best life's journey is a short one, and it is well if, as the end approaches, we can look back over the way and know that we have not lived in vain—know that kind words have been spoken and generous deeds done, which have lightened the burdens that some weary soul has been carrying. He of whom we speak to-day brightened many hearts by kindly words and generous deeds.

Others will speak more particularly of the remarkable career of our late associate, the Senator from Iowa, while I shall content myself with a few simple words of appreciation.

I served in this body with the late Senator from Iowa for seventeen years, being associated with him in the work of the Committee on Appropriations for a portion of that time, and hence had an opportunity to closely observe him in the arduous work that he performed. His service in the Senate was a long one, and it was as valuable and conspicuous as it was prolonged. In all the history of the Government no Commonwealth has been represented by a Senator who did more for his State and the Nation than Senator Allison accomplished. His great experience and wide knowledge of governmental matters enabled him to practically direct the legislation of this body. Courteous, patient, sagacious, and patriotic, he guided legislation with consummate tact and ability and impressed himself upon his associates as a man who could not be spared from its membership. How well we all remember the occasions when a few sentences from his lips swept away heated controversies and settled important questions. His calm demeanor and guarded ut-terances, reenforced by his profound knowledge of legislative matters, left little room for successful disputation. He carried his points by the sheer weight of his wonderful intellectual equipment, gained by long service and close study of public affairs. Other men were more eloquent, but no man was more fairs. Other men were more eloquent, but no man was more sincere, logical, and convincing. In a quiet way he swept sophistry aside, and blazed the path to wise and beneficient results. His loss to the Senate, as well as to his State and his country, can not be adequately put in words, and its full appreciation must be left to the contemplation of those who knew and loved him as we knew and loved him.

As a public man Senator Allison was sui generis. He had no rivals as a legislator. His management of the great appropriation bills excited the wonder and admiration of his colleagues, as also did his capacity for long-continued and arduous work. Probably this body will never see his like again, and of him we may well say, with a change in the name, as Byron said of Sheridan:

Long shall we seek his likeness—long in vain, And turn to all of him which may remain, Sighing that Nature form'd but one such man, And broke the die—in molding Allison.

But notwithstanding we felt that we could not spare him, he is gone, and the place he so long honored in the Senate will know him no more. We will remember his virtues—his kindly word, his cheery smile, his helpful advice, his gracious and sincere friendship—and, remembering all, it will be strange indeed if the memory of this great and good man does not influence our lives and elevate and ennoble our acts. For myself, I feel to-day as I felt when the news of his death reached me in a little country town in New Hampshire, that a personal loss had come to me—that a good friend and a wise counselor had gone out of my life. Allison is dead, and yet it must be that Allison lives.

I can not say, and I will not say,
That he is dead. He is just away!
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
He has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there.
And you—O! you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return—
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love there as the love of here;

Mild and gentle, as he was brave,
When the sweetest love of his life he gave
To simple things; where the violets grew Pure as the eyes they were likened to;
The touches of his hands have strayed
As reverently as his lips have prayed;
When the little brown thrush that harshly chirred
Was dear to him as the mocking bird;
And he pitied as much as a man in pain
A writhing honeybee wet with rain.
Think of him still as the same I say.
He is not dead—he is just—away.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, advancing years impose their penalties upon every man. In their silent action there is a terrible certainty and an unsparing equality of distribution, but among all their warnings, among all the milestones which they place to mark the passage of time, none is more mournful than the task of reading the letters and biographies of those whom we have known and loved, or the sad duty which compels us to utter in public our words of praise and affection for the friends, the companions, the long-trusted leaders who have gone. Yet all these trials must be faced as we look into the eyes of Fate or listen to its knocking at the door. All that we can do is to meet them seriously and solemnly, yet in the right spirit, without empty and helpless lamentation.

The death of Senator Allison has brought these familiar thoughts to my mind, old thoughts, indeed, but ever new, and recurring now with a painful frequency as I reflected what a long and affectionate friendship was ended, what a blank space was suddenly made in my daily life by his departure.

I recall with great vividness my first meeting with Senator Allison at dinner in 1874, at the house of Mr. Samuel Hooper, a distinguished Member of Congress representing one of the Boston districts. The party was a small one, consisting only of our host, his nephew, myself, Senator Conkling, and Senator Allison. I was a boy just out of college and Mr. Allison appeared to me a person of great age and dignity. As a matter of fact, he was only forty-five, which seems to me now quite young, and he had but just begun that career in the Senate which was destined to prove so long and so memorable. Mr. Hooper's nephew, a classmate and lifelong friend of mine, and I sat by and listened to all that was said that evening with deep and silent interest. The talk was very good and well worth listening to. To those who remember the men it is needless to say that Mr. Conkling took the unquestioned lead in the conversation, and that when he criticised, as he frequently did, he spared no one.

Young men, without much thought of the pain or injustice which may be inflicted, enjoy sarcasm and satire and wit at the expense of others. Youth is not, as a rule, a tender-hearted period, and Mr. Conkling showed plenty of sport in discussing not only his enemies but those whom Cosimo de Medici declared were more to be feared by every man—his friends. Mr. Allison himself did not escape. My remembrance of Mr. Conkling and of the character of his talk is very sharp and clear-cut, and that is all. My recollection of Senator Allison is equally distinct, but it brings with it a gentle memory of the kindness of a distinguished and much older man to a young fellow whom he never expected to see again, of a sense of humor as kindly as it was keen, of a good nature which took even Mr. Conkling's gibes with a quiet dignity and easy patience, very pleasant to witness and very pleasant still to recall. Perhaps it is not unprofitable, either, to remember these things, for I think that among the qualities manifested that evening, thirty-five years ago, a lesson in good manners, in self-restraint, and in personal dignity might be discovered without undue delving.

I have spoken of this little incident, quite unimportant except to myself, because the qualities which I then saw, as I thought, in Mr. Allison were really among his most conspicuous attributes. He did not wear his heart upon his sleeve, but his gentleness, his humor, his innate kindliness were as apparent to the casual and humble stranger as to those who knew him best. He did not cover them with austerity, solemnity, or pomposity and reserve them only for the benefit of the leading actors upon the great stage where his life was passed, but he gave them freely to all the world, and made the world thereby, so far as his influence went, a happier place to live in.

After I came to Washington it was my good fortune to know Senator Allison better while I was still in the House, and for fifteen years I have seen him constantly and intimately every day of each session. The nearer view changed in no respect, although it enhanced, what my first brief glance of him had revealed. But years of a common service disclosed to me what I had only dimly perceived before, his qualities as a public man and as a statesman, for he was universally admitted to deserve the latter title long before the last hard condition which turns a successful politician into a statesman, as pointed out by Mr. Speaker Reed, had been fulfilled. It is of Mr. Allison in this capacity that I desire to speak to-day. Others here will trace the stages of his career and recount his services better than I. His life will be told by his biographers in the time to come with adequate materials and in the large historical proportions which it so well deserves. My purpose is a modest one, merely to attempt to give my impression of Mr. Allison as a statesman and of the type of public man which he presented in his long, useful, and honorable service of more than forty years. That service was crowded with incessant than forty years. work, for no more industrious, no more conscientious man ever lived. The hardest suffering of his last year was the sense that he could not do all the work which pertained to his high position as he had been wont to do it.

The great measures to which, as the years passed by, his name was attached would be an imposing list; and if we were to add to this those in which he had a large, shaping, and even controlling part, it would fill pages of our Record. His monument as a lawmaker, a great function when properly fulfilled, is to be found in the statutes and the history of the United States during the last forty years. But his most valuable work, if we would look at it as a whole, as his personal contribution to the welfare of his fellow-beings, is not conspicuous in the printed pages of books of laws or books of history, now that he is dead, any more than it was in the mouths of men while he To value him rightly we must understand the Senate and its daily work. The brilliant oration, the violent diatribe, the coarse invective, the vulgar abuse are spread in large letters and in long columns before the public eye; and except in the case of a great speech, contributing to the settlement of a great question, they fade as quickly as the tints of the rainbow on the breaking wave and are rarely able to find in the days when the account is made up even the slight remembrance of a historian's footnote. No mistake is commoner than that which confuses notoriety with fame. Fame may be the last infirmity of noble minds, but it is built upon the rocks of deeds done, while notoriety is always fleeting and generally vulgar. Mr. Allison's fame rests securely not only upon the great historic measures in which he had a leading share, but upon his steady work done here day by day, quietly, diligently, thoroughly, without the glare of headlines, for the most part unobserved and largely unappreciated by the American people, who profited so greatly by its results. The Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] has a favorite phrase of description in regard to some of those who have served here or who serve here now. When he would praise highly, he says such a man is "a good Senator." This has nothing to do with character or disposition, or with virtue, public or private, but means that a Senator does the work of the Senate well-the work of carrying on the Government, of advancing good measures and arresting bad ones, the obscure work, the est work, in which there is much labor and little glory and which demands constant attendance and unflagging attention. by this exacting test, who would hesitate to say that for many years Mr. Allison was our best Senator?

He was a party leader, a wise adviser and framer of policies, but he was also, and above all, one of the men who carry on the Government. They are not many at any time and they are absolutely essential at all times. In the midst of political strife, in the tumult which attends the rise and fall of parties, to use the English phrase," The King's Government must be carried Whatever storm may rage, however bitter and loud may be the strife of contending factions, the public debts must be paid, national credit maintained, the army and navy kept on a proper footing, the mails must be delivered, and the revenue collected. No matter what happens, some one must be at work "ohne hast, ohne rast" to see that these things are done in due season. Macaulay has said that Attila did not conduct his campaigns on exchequer bills, but we do; and what is more important, we maintain the orderly movement of our Government in that way from day to day. It is a heavy burden and the country owes much to those who bear it. This was Mr. Allison's task during more than the lifetime of a generation. Beyond anyone in our time, perhaps beyond anyone in our history, did he bear this great responsibility, and he never failed in his duty. For thirty-six years a member of the Committee on Appropriations, for twenty-five years its chairman, he became a sort of permanent chancellor of the exchequer. In the long list of emi-nent men who have filled that great office in England there is not one who has surpassed him in knowledge, in the dexterity and skill with which he drafted laws and reconciled conflicting views, in financial ability or in the strength of capacity with which he gauged the sources of revenue and adjusted expenditures to income. No one ever applied to him the cheap title of "watchdog of the Treasury," whose glory comes merely from barking so as to split the ears of the groundlings and whose niggard and unenlightened resistance to every expenditure, no matter how meritorious, usually causes enormous and increased outlay in the end. Mr. Allison was too great as well as too experienced a man to think parsimony was statesmanship, and not to know that a wise liberality was as a rule the truest economy of

Very few persons, even here, realize what labor, what knowledge, what experience he brought to his work. We saw a great bill reported, we watched him handle it with a tact and skill which I have never seen equaled, we noted that he was familiar with every item and could answer every question, and we were satisfied with the result and did not pause to consider what it all meant. To achieve this result implied a minute knowledge of every branch of the Government and every detail of expenditure which had cost days and nights of labor and years of experience. Scrupulous honesty, of course, was his, but that would have gone but a short distance without the trained intelligence, the unswerving diligence, the disciplined mind which controlled the disposition of the millions upon millions that passed unscathed through his strong, clean hands. Moreover, he was always here. The standing joke about his caution and his avoidance of unqualified statement, which no one enjoyed more than he, grew out of certain temperamental attributes. But it is well to remember that, however guarded he was in speech, he never failed to vote, which is the real and final index of political courage and of constancy of opinion and conviction. He may have put clauses of limitation into what he said, but he never shrank from, never evaded, a vote.

Presidents and cabinets, Speakers and House chairmen came and went, but he remained at his post until we regarded him in the field of finance and appropriation almost, as was said of Webster, like an institution of the country. legislature of Iowa elect him to the Senate. Pride in the State, pride in him, and personal affection counted for much in their action; but I can not but think that they realized also their responsibility to the country which prized so highly the services of their Senator. It is the fashion, just now, to decry legislatures, but we shall wait long before we find any form of election which will represent as truly the real will, not only of the people of a State, but of the people of all the States, as did the legislature of Iowa during those thirty-six years. It will be a sorry day for Government and people alike when we lose that permanence and continuity, that directing and guiding force, which such careers and such service as Mr. Allison's have given to the Senate. It is such careers as his which have made the Senate what it has been in our history, and if, under pretense of making it more popular, we are subjected to schemes which open the door wide to those who would commit fraud and to those who would spend money without stint, we shall not only see the popular will distorted, travestied, and defeated, but the country will be deprived of the long-continued services of such men as Mr. Allison, which have been and are of inestimable value to the United States.

Where, then, shall we rank him? To put him out of or above the class to which he rightfully belongs would not be the part of love and affection, but of vain eulogy, which perishes with the breath which utters it. He did not stand in the class with Lincoln, savior of the state, greatest, as an English historian has said, of all the figures of the nineteenth century. He did not reach that lonely height. Nor was he one of the class of men like Bismarck and Cavour, builders of nations, relentless wielders of armies, masters of all the subtle arts of diplomacy. Mr. Allison belongs to that class of statesmen of which the history of the English-speaking race furnishes, happily, many examples. They are the men who carry on the Government and who have made possible the practical success of free representative institutions. Wise, farseeing, prudent, devoted to their country, and abounding in good sense, they command by their absolute honesty and capacity the entire confidence of senates and parliaments. Among the chief statesmen of this class Mr. Allison holds his high place. Such a verdict as this may at this moment sound cold, but it has one great merit, that of truth, and the more we consider it the more we shall understand what high praise it carries with it.

We Americans take great pride in our country, and no people has better cause for pride. In no country is patriotism more We never hesitate to give expression to our love of intense. country under all conditions, sometimes with a vehemence which tends to make others think that we doubt our own sincerity, and with a disregard of time and place which outsiders, at least, are prone to deem crude and tasteless. Yet, although it sounds like a paradox, we are at the same time curiously distrustful of ourselves and seem almost void of self-confidence in judging the work of Americans. We oscillate between the extremes of unintelligent praise, given merely because that which we praise is American, and trembling hesitation in awarding proper place to real achievement. The higher we rise in the scale of intelligence and education, the more timid we seem to become, and we look over our shoulders and criticise and even sneer at American performance because, apparently, we feel that we may be laughed at by somebody or because we suspect that we are thing apart from and beneath the standards of the civilized For no better reason than that we have at times praised foolishly and extravagantly we are shy of praising rightly and justly. We shrank away from Walt Whitman until men like Rossetti and Symonds and Stevenson and Swinburne had spoken, and then we only slowly acknowledged that the Long Island carpenter was a great poet and one who had become a real and original force in the splendid annals of English verse. As with the poet so with the painter and sculptor, the writer and the statesman. We yield easily to the provincial temptation to hail with exultation the heaven-born genius who generally never justifies his title, and we doubt and hesitate and pause in giving due place to the work of a lifetime, deepfounded on all that is best in our inheritance, slowly and painfully built up by talents steadily applied and by sacrifice of self to a noble purpose

If Mr. Allison had done the work and held the place in England that he did and held here, his memoirs would appear in fit and stately volumes like those which recount the life of the late Lord Granville, whom Mr. Allison resembled in service and character, although the fields of their activity were different. Had he been a great English statesman, as he was a great American statesman, his statue would have its place here in the Capitol, the scene of his labors, as at Westminster we find the statues of English prime ministers and parliamentary leaders, many of whom Mr. Allison surpassed in all that goes to make a statesman. I trust that this may yet be done, but I greatly fear that we shall go on adding to the freaks in marble and to the effigies of the temporarily illustrious which now crowd against those of some of our really great men and only serve to disfigure one of the most beautiful rooms which modern architecture has given to the world. I say all this of Mr. Allison, not in the beaten way of eulogy or tribute, but because I wished, by historical standards and, so far as possible, with the coolness of history, to vindicate the place of a man who was a great public servant, a stresman as eminent as he was modest, and to whom this country owes a large debt, not merely for his lifelong labors, but for the example he set to us all and the dignity he gave to the Government of the United States.

And yet, when everything has been said, strive as hard as we may to govern ourselves by the tests of history and to award to Mr. Allison the place which was rightfully his, and which all men should acknowledge, at the end it is the man of whom we think to-day and not the Senator. His death meant a personal loss to each of us. His abilities, his honesty, his unstinted devotion to the country, his fine character, his keen sense of humor, we do well to tell them over. He fully deserves it all. But what history or posterity can not feel or know is the one thing we feel most and know best. He inspired love and affection. He was beloved by all who knew him, and to us here his death leaves a blank which can not be filled. Great powers were his, but the greatest of all his attributes was that kind, warm heart, that goodness to others which cast a spell over everyone who came within his influence.

His life was gentle, and the elements So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up And say to all the world, "This was a man."

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have had no opportunity or, indeed, desire to undertake to prepare any studied or labored tribute to our dead colleague. It was only yesterday afternoon that I was invited by one of the Iowa Senators to participate as a speaker on this occasion. I had intended to offer a few brief sentences of unstudied praise as a tribute to Senator Allison's memory anyway, and what I shall say will make up in sincerity what it lacks in polish or literary merit.

I have had the honor to be a Member of this body for fourteen years, and during eight of those years I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations. Of course previous to becoming a member of that committee I had observed the Senator from Iowa in his everyday work here, and had learned to love and admire him for his many noble qualities; but in the more intimate relationship of the committee work I grew familiar with the marvelous qualities of industry, patience, alertness, and capacity which so markedly characterized him, and I grew acquainted with other personal phases of his character which rarely or never were shown in the Senate. While he was gentle and patient always, and courteous as a habit, and, in fact, incapable of being otherwise than courteous and kindly, he had about him a humor, an appreciation of what we call a "joke," such as I have seen surpassed by few men.

Those who have associated with him privately will recall the gleam of the eye, the arching of the brow, the stoop of the head, while he looked at one, as it were, over something, with which he would speak a sentence replete with wit and humor, and, while not laughing at his own exhibition of it, would seem to question you as to whether or not you had caught it.

In our intercourse I had occasion, hundreds of times, to wonder at his memory. The readiness with which he would refer to laws passed almost when I was a boy was almost marvelous. He would call on his clerk to bring something or he would make reference to some statute long since passed, quoting it almost verbatim, illustrating the familiarity with our legislation which his long service and retentive memory enabled him to exhibit.

He was always more than kindly and punctiliously observant of the courtesies due to a man of the minority party. I have associated with chairmen of committees, on which I was one of the minority, who were very different in this regard, who seemed to feel that because their party was in power and they themselves in a majority on the committee, it was not worth while to pay attention to or consider objections or suggestions from those who were in the minority.

from those who were in the minority.

It was never so with Mr. Allison. He would observe toward a minority member of the committee a greater courtesy and consideration than he frequently did to members of his own party.

It was this uniform kindliness and desire to be friendly and obliging which made him so dear to every man in this Chamber, and I do not hesitate to speak it as my belief that he was as dear to the Democrats here as he was to the Republicans.

Mr. President, we have had in the last two years great losses in this body. The long catalogue of names, illustrious and otherwise, which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] recited in his remarks, shows how rapidly the Senate changes. The Senator from Georgia and I came into the Senate together, and he mentioned the fact that there were only eleven men here of longer service than ourselves, and after the 4th of March there will be only nine, as two of those who are of longer service will no longer be with us after that date. Thus we see that in these fourteen years seventy-odd Senators have disappeared from our midst, many of them, a majority, I believe, into the grave, some have retired voluntarily, while others in the vicissitudes of politics have been left at home by their people.

I want to call your memories for a brief while to four remarkable men who have died within the last eighteen months—Morgan, Pettus, Allison, Proctor—two from the North and two from the South land. They were all essentially types of the best that American civilization has produced. It is doubtful if there ever existed a greater contrast in some respects than between Senator Allison and Senator Proctor. One was as genial and as peaceful in his attributes as a June day; the other was like the granite mountains of his State—somewhat austere, quiet, undemonstrative, but as full of the milk of human kindness as any man I have met here, and withal possessing an inherent strength which commanded respect, while there was no effort at all on his part at anything like ostentation.

I recall my surprise—for it was very shortly after my entrance into this body—on hearing the speech which Senator Proctor made after his visit to Cuba on a personal inspection. On his return to Washington he made a report as though he had been a military officer sent by the Government to go there and come back and tell us what the trouble there was about and to give his conclusions. There was nothing of bitterness in that recital and there was much of the judicial temperament, calm, clear, concise, and forceful, and the English was so choice that, knowing Senator Proctor as a man of affairs, a man who perhaps had not had as great advantages as others, I felt constrained to go and tell him that he ought to be elected professor of belles-lettres in some university, because very few of those who pretend to teach English could approach him in such a production as that.

I come now to two other great men whose deaths we lament, whom we all miss here. We all realize that the two Senators from Alabama had reached and crossed beyond the fourscore mark, while the other two, Mr. Allison and Mr. Proctor, were very near it. They have all fallen like ripened heads of golden grain. Senator Morgan had impressed himself upon this body as a man of the profoundest attainments in knowledge of governmental affairs and history, and was, in fact, considered by all as a kind of walking encyclopedia upon whom one could call at any time for anything in connection with American history or jurisprudence or legislation and get the desired information.

The last of the four men, Mr. Pettus, was in some respects the most remarkable of the group, not in brilliancy of intellect, though his mind was as clear and pellucid as an icicle, but in a sturdiness, a strength, a vigor, and a frankness and simplicity that endeared him to all of us almost from the day of his entrance here; and my purpose in one sense in recalling these four figures to your memories for a brief while is to direct attention to the most beautiful compliment or deserving tribute that I have ever heard on this floor from one Senator to another, living or dead, and in this instance it was from a Senator to one who was not then dead, but has since, like himself, "crossed over the river."

It was in the debate on the increase of salaries bill, when Senator Pettus felt called on to speak of his colleague, who was then ill at home, and to remind the Senate of his long and arduous labor and of the immense amount of work he had done here in the quarter of a century during which he had served the South and the people of America. And after reciting the fact that he was a great lawyer, as we all know, and what his practice yielded him at the time when he ceased to be a practicing lawyer and came to the Senate as a public servant, he went on to state that it was almost certain had Morgan remained at the practice of the law he would have been a very wealthy man by that time. And then, reciting the fact from his personal knowledge, because they both lived in the same town, Selma, that his property was worth just about what it was when he came here, with a fervor of voice which rang through my soul like a fire bell in the night, he said:

The people of Alabama are proud of him because he did not acquire great wealth here, as some men have done.

That sentence ought to be graven on Morgan's tomb.

Watching Mr. Allison as I did, seeing the method which he followed in handling the appropriation bills involving hundreds of millions, the patience with which he investigated every item that was under consideration or if a new item was proposed by some one, and remembering that after all these years of handling those billions and billions of dollars, with opportunities to have had some of it stick to his hand, had he been venal, he died not rich, I wish to bear testimony, as far as my feeble voice can go, to the fact that if there were ever honest men in Congress William B. Allison was one of them, and the people of Iowa should be proud that he did not die rich.

Mr. President, as I look around this Chamber and remember the men with whom I have associated who are now dead and gone, and remember also that within the recent past I have been face to face with the dread Angel Azrael, have looked over the fence, as it were, and have seen people digging my own grave, I have had brought home to me with telling force the beauty of the little poem by Charles Lamb. There are only three or four stanzas. I have not taken the trouble to look it up. I read it forty years ago and I may not quote it with entire accuracy:

Ghost like, I paced 'round the haunts of my childhood. Earth seemed a desert I was bound to traverse, Seeking to find the old familiar faces.

How some they have died, and some they have left me, And some are taken from me; all are departed; All, all are gone, the old familiar faces.

There are so many familiar faces that I can recall in my more or less brief service here that are gone that these thoughts come to me, and then I think, further, of that plaintive wail in The Lotos-Eaters, where Ulysses and his companions, who were searching for home, trying to find their way back to Greece, came to the island in the sea of which Homer speaks, and the words of Tennyson come up:

Death is the end of life; ah, why Should life all labor be?
Let us alone. Time driveth onward fast,
And in a little while our lips are dumb.
Let us alone. What is it that will last?
All things are taken from us, and become Portions and parcels of the dreadful Past.
Let us alone. What pleasure can we have To war with evil? Is there any peace
In ever climbing up the climbing wave?
All things have rest, and ripen toward the grave
In silence; ripen, fall and cease:
Give us long rest or death, dark death, or dreamful ease.

We all know, when we take the time to think, that death is inevitable, but we are happily constituted in being able to forget it and pursue our paths here and discharge our labors and duties as best we may.

All I can say in regard to the career of the dead Senator, whom we here do honor to, is that none of us can hope to surpass him in length of service or in value of service to his country; and it ought to be the purpose and desire of each of us to emulate that great man's character, and as far as possible to imitate his virtues.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, when WILLIAM B. ALLISON went over to the "great majority" the country lost a statesman of large experience, high character, and acknowledged ability, and the Senate a most useful and helpful Member.

He recalls to all of us the eminent men of the past generations who made the Senate of the United States the greatest deliberative body in the world, and he will be entered on the roll of those who have most diligently and efficiently served the Republic.

A native son of the great West, he was educated at a college which, by its name, brings back to mind the time when Connecticut claimed as its own the region now embraced within the boundaries of the State of Ohio. In that State he studied and practiced law until the adventurous spirit which led to the settlement and development of the Western Reserve impelled him to join those who formed the advance civilization on the continent, and at 28 years of age he took up his residence in Iowa, in which State he very soon became prominent, and which he served in one capacity or another up to the time of his death.

Only four years intervened between the time when he became a citizen of Iowa and the outbreak of the civil war, and when that great struggle was impending he was a member of the staff of Iowa's governor and aided in organizing the volunteers who were to go to the front.

Two years later he was called to represent the State in Congress, and since 1863 he has been, with the exception of two years, a Member of one or the other branches of this great legislative body.

In 1873 he was chosen to succeed United States Senator James Harlan, and for thirty-five years he has represented the great State of Iowa in the Senate of the United States, exceeding by eight years the next longest term of service.

Forty-three years of his life were devoted to active work in national legislation, and from the very beginning that work was fruitful of good, and its benefits will extend far into the future.

The first term of service of Mr. Allison in the House of Representatives demonstrated in a most marked manner his peculiar qualifications to deal with the great financial questions which came before Congress, and he was appointed a member of the Ways and Means Committee and there served during those years when our finances were in a most critical condition.

The experience he there acquired and the work he did during his subsequent service in the House on that important committee gave him that profound and accurate knowledge which later made him the leading authority in Congress on questions of a financial character.

financial character.

The refunding of the public debt, the remission of the most burdensome internal taxes, and the readjustment of the tariff were some of the vital problems which he assisted in solving, to the lasting benefit of the United States.

When he came to the Senate he was, in consequence of his large experience and wide knowledge of such public business, assigned to the Appropriations Committee, of which he became chairman in 1881, retaining that distinguished post up to the time of his death, with the exception of a few years during which the Democrats controlled the Senate.

He had hardly entered the Senate when he was called upon to participate in the most important legislative service since the civil war—that which brought about the resumption of specie payments in 1875, making our depreciated currency as good as gold in all the markets of the world. For his work in the Senate caucus committee, which framed the resumption act, he was placed on the Finance Committee, of which he could have been chairman, but he preferred the chairmanship of the Appropriations Committee, in directing the labors of which he has been instrumental in effecting some of the most important legislation of his time.

It was also during his earlier years in the Senate that his influence was felt in a most marked manner in preserving to the United States the gold standard in the face of the violent and sustained attacks of the free-silver advocates. It was his amendment, preserving the gold standard while providing for a limited amount of silver coinage, which saved the battle for a sound basis for our national credit, and has been of inestimable benefit from that day to this. His action then and later was based on the conviction that the disuse of silver as a standard of value by the commercial nations of the world would bring ruin upon us should we adopt that metal as our own standard, unless all other nations with whom we traded should likewise change their monetary basis. That fundamental idea influenced him in all of his subsequent efforts to place beyond the possibility of successful attack that standard of values which is recognized in all the countries of the globe.

Great, also, were his services in connection with the framing of the McKinley tariff and the amendment of the Mills tariff bill, for his experience in the House had made him an acknowledged expert in solving these complex and difficult problems which tariff legislation gives rise to. The act reforming the internal-revenue laws of the United States was also prepared by him, as was the law giving to the District of Columbia its present form of government, which has worked so successfully since 1874.

Among the later instances of his genius for legislation may

Among the later instances of his genius for legislation may be pointed out the recent law increasing the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission. To that bill, as it came from the House, hundreds of amendments were proposed, which, if adopted, would have swamped the measure and defeated the object aimed at.

The danger was avoided by an agreement to adopt only the Allison amendments which accommodated the differences of all except the few holding the most radical ideas, and, as amended by him, in which amendments the administration concurred, the bill became a law. Such are some of the instances of Senator Allison's genius for legislation, particularly legislation that contributes to the well-being of our country for long years after its enactment. As a constructive statesman he had no superior among his contemporaries.

The value to the United States of Senator Allison's services is very great indeed, for his influence has been felt in shaping the most important legislation of the past forty-five years. To that influence is due in a great measure the fact that practically no mistakes have been made, and that we now stand on the firm foundation of those laws which he had a very conspicuous part in forming; and that these laws have proved to be the sure basis for our progress and prosperity is due to the fact that Senator Allison constantly strove to establish sound and correct principles of government, irrespective of policies, political affiliations, or political pressure.

He rose far above considerations which weigh heavily with men of narrow minds and more selfish character, and considered solely the good of the entire country and the well-being of its entire people. Such was the spirit in which Abraham Lincoln so administered the law that his name will forevermore be linked with that of Washington in the hearts of the American people. It was this fine quality which has made the memory of William McKinley dear to every patriotic American.

That minute and sure distinction between statesmanship and mere political expediency, which is the certain index of a mind raised far above the mud in which political self-seekers wallow, was apparent in every act of William B. Allison's public life. His aim was not party advantage, but the good of the Nation; not the success of political schemes to redound to his own advantage in power or prestige, but the peace and well-being of all the people; not to secure the applause of the unthinking crowd, but to attain that greatest reward for public service-the consciousness that he has been faithful to the Constitution and to the best interests of the Republic. All who knew him here recognized that such were the motives which actuated him in all he did, and it was this knowledge which compelled that respect and confidence which were felt for him as a leader; without such respect and confidence his great ability would not have been served to raise him to the high position he attained. With the recognition of his absolute unselfishness, his leadership was gladly acknowledged and remained to the end un-

During these recent years which may be called the "era of vilification," when there appear to have come to the surface in all ranks of life, from the very highest to the very lowest, individuals whose sole desire seems to be to attack men in public and private life who have achieved what is commonly called "success;" when accusations of dishonesty and falsehood are made recklessly and thrown broadcast to the world; when men in high station have been subjected to more searching examination and more unreasoning criticism than perhaps ever before in our history, Senator Allison stood high above the rushing stream of defamation and innuendo, no drops of whose dirty water soiled the spotless garments that he wore.

Every Member of this body has had reason to appreciate the fine character of Senator Allison and the high standard he placed before himself as that which should be lived up to by men in public life; and we can do no better than to make his character the standard for ourselves, and to strive to measure up as nearly to it as he did to the standard set for himself.

Those of us who, as I have, came into more intimate relations with him through membership on the same committees, have had the opportunity for learning at close range all of his great, ennobling, and endearing qualities. My association with him for more than twelve years on the Committee on Appropriations has given me a chance to know how ardent was his patriotism, how conscientious was his performance of public duty, how great was his patience in investigating every question which came before the committee, and how carefully were his judgments formed. His courtesy and deference to every Member of the Senate, the willingness to hear and consider objections to his proposals, the kindness and consideration with which he expressed differences of opinion, endeared him to each one of us and strengthened our regard for him and our confidence in his judgment.

The longer we knew him the surer we were of his absolute unselfishness, and from time to time some fact would become known that like lightning flash would reveal the height on which he stood above the wild turmoil of political ambitions. He time and again declined a Cabinet position, believing that he could render more effective service to his State and country in the Senate.

At one time, I am assured by a distinguished man who knows whereof he speaks, he could have received the nomination for the Presidency, which nomination would have been equivalent to an election, if he had been willing to make a concession which in no way reflected on his honor, but which was simply not in consonance with his idea as to his public duty. Without hesitation he refused the great office, and that refusal was never regretted.

His ambition was to serve his country according to his own high standard of duty. To make concessions for the sake of personal aggrandizement was to him failure in his life work, and he died, as he had lived, faithful to the people of the Republic, maintaining to the last its high ideals and traditions, leaving a name that will hereafter always be found in the list of the ablest, the most useful, and the most honored of its citizens.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, when Senator Allison died, on the 4th of last August, he closed a legislative career which began in 1863 and extended over a period of nearly forty-five years, a career the most notable and pregnant in all our legislative history. He entered the legislative arena during the great stress of the civil war, bore his share in the hard and sad task of reconstruction, bravely aided in refunding and liquidating our great debt, strenuously participated in restoring our currency to a specie basis and, ultimately, to a single monetary standard, and was most active in promoting our industrial and economic progress and development by judicious legislation. When he entered the public service the population of a divided country was a little over 30,0000,000; when he left us forever the population of a reunited country was nearly three times as large, and during this period our territorial possessions had been augmented to the extent of more than 700,000 square miles, more than one-fourth of our entire territorial area.

Since the constitutional birth of our Nation, those years of his public service were the most eventful and pregnant in all our history, calling for the highest degree of legislative wisdom and constructive statesmanship. The vitality and integrity of our country was on trial, in one form or another, all the time. The menace of secession was followed by the menace of repudiation in various forms, and that by the menace of concentrated, arrogant, and lawless capital.

The conservation of our system of government in its purity and in its original design is a continuing task, requiring well-equipped sentinels constantly on guard. And of these sentinels Senator Allison was one of the most faithful and best equipped. As a legislator the greatest sphere of his usefulness was found in the committees dealing with our finances, our revenues, and our expenditures. On these great committees and in their work he was a leader and exercised a dominating influence. In the parliamentary governments of the Old World, like that of Great Britain, such legislative tasks are simpler and much easier. There the ministry prepare, formulate, and bring in their supply bills, and their budgets are all ready for consideration, requiring, in most instances, but a scanty revision and minor modification. Under our system such bills are formulated, amended, and modified by the members of our great committees, thus entailing a most painstaking and strenuous task on the legislators.

While the Senate does not originate such bills, yet its power of revision and amendment is unlimited; and we who have for some time been Members of this body know how carefully the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Finance scrutinize, review, and oftentimes largely and most beneficially amend such bills. This is a work of the highest and utmost importance, and one that enters into the most vital functions of our Government and concerns the prosperity and well-being of all our people. The adjustment of revenues and expenditures, enough of the one and not too much of the other, is a most delicate and far-reaching task; one that, in the very nature of the case, can not be subrogated to any other, and requires the highest degree of legislative skill. And in this great work Senator Allison was unexcelled. While his legislative vision and care extended to all parts of the great field, yet in this special work he stood without a peer. Careful and painstaking, scrupulous and fair, no item was too big or too small for his consideration. He was faithful to the uttermost, and frowned upon all needless and wasteful expenditure.

While he was not an orator in the common acceptation of the term, yet he was a clear and most forceful debater, carrying conviction to all within the reach of his voice. And he had that rare gift, which some great orators lack, of being always in earnest and sincere. He never spoke for the mere sake of speech, or for the purpose of appearing in the public limelight. There was no hungry look in his eyes for the press gallery and no yearning to drum up a crowd in the galleries. He rarely, if ever, gave notice of a speech. He was, in every respect, the antipode of those legislators who limit their task to the delivery of an oration or two during the session, and who seem oblivious to all else and hardly ever put in an appearance in their committees.

A legislative body composed of such members would, at the end of a session, no doubt, be possessed of a large volume of orations, but a rather scant and imperfect volume of statutes. They are not, as a rule, the men who formulate and pass legislation. They are the mere bric-a-brac of the legislative chamber—ornamental and fine to behold, but of little practical use. It is the men of the other type—of which Senator Allison is the best and foremost example—who prepare, formulate, and pass the essential and requisite legislation of the country. Such men prepare bills, meet with the committees to carefully consider, revise, and correct the same, and attend to their passage when reported. Men of this type are the really useful men of a legislative body—the men who bring about results, and who are not the mere coiners of fine phrases.

A good legislator has a double duty entailed upon him. He must not only aim to promote the passage of good and wholesome bills, but it is also his duty to prevent the passage of bad and unwholesome legislation.

We all know from experience that there are, at times, measures pending that would be detrimental to the welfare of the people, and in such cases we never ought to hesitate to put a veto upon them. Senator Allison, while he was always ready to promote the passage of wise, remedial legislation, never hesitated to oppose and defeat measures which he deemed unwise and unsafe. He was always alert, and no bill of any importance on the calendar ever escaped his notice and attention. The range of legislation is so vast and extensive that most legislators can do little more than study and acquaint themselves with measures coming from the committees of which they are mem-As to other measures, they have to rely, to a great extent, for information and guidance, upon the members of the committees from whence such bills come. Senator Allison was an exception to this rule. He was not only thoroughly conversant with measures coming from the committees of which he was a member, but he seemed to be well acquainted with every bill on the calendar. He was always on legislative guard and picket duty. He was always ready to hall every pending bill and to ask: "Who goes there?" If the proper countersign was not given, the measure found no favor.

By most men he was, no doubt, classed as a conservative; but his conservatism was not of the kind that was hostile to necessary and true reform. It was rather of the kind that reformed what was crude and ripened what was unripe in the field of legislation. His conservatism was of the kind that toned erratic and visionary radicalism to a sane and practical Great reforms often appear, in the first instance, in a crude and indigestible embryo, but they furnish the inspiration to the calm, prudent, and wise statesman, from which he evolves, in practical and effective shape, a genuine and substantial measure of reform. The rabid radical may furnish the crude ore and the combustion, but the calm and wise statesman furnishes the flux that brings forth the true metal. Senator Allison was a member and leader of this class of statesmen; and how valuable and intensely useful such men are.

Legislative bodies, like individuals, are sometimes intensely emotional and apt to be carried away from the true course by excessive feeling. Senator Allison was less given to the emotional and erratic than most men, and hence he was always the safest and best of leaders. He had the happy faculty of calmly listening to and weighing all arguments, pro and con, and then, with deliberation, reaching a conclusion that was, as a rule, sound and the only proper course to pursue. No safer or more vigilant master than he ever trod the bridge of the legislative craft. When he stood there the true course was always taken, and all rocks, shoals, and quicksands were avoided.

He was possessed of another rare quality accorded to but few. He could bring about results, in the face of contention and opposition, with less friction and less heartache than is given to most men. And this came from his equipoise, his patience, his calmness and serenity, and from his careful consideration of the feelings and impulses of his associates.

The army recruit, if he enters a raw battalion as crude and as little trained as himself, makes but slow progress in becoming a real soldier; but if he enters a battalion of trained and veteran officers and men, he speedily becomes a trained and reliable soldier, especially under the guidance and instruction of trained and experienced officers. What is true of the army recruit is true even to a greater degree of the legislative recruit. The legislative nestors, rather than the rules, train and make effective, by precept and example, the recruit who enters this Chamber. And when these legislative veterans are possessed of warm hearts, kindly natures, and helpful dispositions, as was Senator Allison in a high degree, what a blessing they prove to the new Member. He encounters no chilly frost from such a veteran, and under his auspices he partakes of the legislative sunshine, parts with the feeling of isolation which is apt, in the first instance, to possess him, and feels that he, too, is an important factor in the curriculum of legislation, and, as a consequence, he soon becomes a useful Member.

Senator Allison was the best and most benignant of drill sergeants for the new Member. I remember, with gratitude, the kindly manner in which he received me when I first entered the Senate and how helpful he was to me on many occasions; and it was all so natural and so unaffected—a very part of his nature and make-up. As he was to me, so he was to all new Members, Like all great and good men, he was neither vain nor boastful, nor given to the pursuit of mere glory. He wrought from a sense of duty and with an eye singly to the welfare of our country and not from a sense of glory.

He was, quietly and without ostentation, brave, fearless, and energetic in the performance of his great duties. As a statesman, his grasp and vision was wise, comprehensive, and safe. As a legislator, he was unexcelled in mental and moral equipment, in strenuous and incessant activity, and in accomplishing lasting and beneficent results. His death has left a vacuum in this body that is hard to fill. His most lasting monument will be found in the annals of Congress. Of all the great men who have served in the Congress of the United States, he was by all odds the most useful. Others there may be who shine with a brighter though more flickering luster, but no one with a light so clear, so invigorating, so strength producing, so continuing as Senator Allison. He remains as a guiding beacon for legislators for all time to come.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, other Senators have portrayed the life and matchless services that Senator Allison performed during his long service in this body and in the other House; a service beginning March 4, 1863, in the administration of Lincoln, and extending to August 4, 1908. He passed through the eventful scenes of the civil war and those growing out of it, and was of unequaled service to his country. To him we owe many of the most valued acts of legislation that have been passed during his long term of public life, but I desire to say only a word to pay a tribute of friendship to his memory.

My personal acquaintance with Senator Allison covered a long period of years, for I had the pleasure of knowing him for many years before I came to the Senate, and the almost daily association with him here makes me feel his loss most grievously

In looking back over the last few years I find it hard to miss so many valued friends distinguished in public life. Hanna, Sewell, Platt, Morgan, and many others; and now the senior Senator, to whom we all looked up with respect and admiration, has gone.

How often in the future we shall miss his genial personality, which made him welcome everywhere; his wise counsel; his calm judgment; his wonderfully keen intellectual grasp. The Senate in which he served so long and so well mourns him, too.

Time goes, you say? Ah, no! Alas, time stays; we go.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, we raise the curtain to-day upon the most momentous events in the history of the Republic. The life of our Nation can be broadly divided into three eras—its creation, its preservation, and its development. The two last are vividly recalled by the career of Senator William B. Allison. He entered Congress in 1862 and died a Senator in 1908. Never during recorded time has so much been done for liberty, humanity, and progress as is crowded into this period. The whole world is its debtor, but the United States is our retrospect at this hour.

We are here, in the assembly honored by his membership and the Hall which witnessed his activities, to pay tribute to the memory of one of the most influential statesmen of these wonderful years. He took his seat in the House of Representatives when the future seemed darkest. A solid South and divided North, disaster to the Union cause in the field and threatened intervention by Europe, our credit seriously impaired, and widespread discontent created a situation full of peril for the preservation of the Union. The continent trembled under the tread of armies greater in number than any before marshaled in modern times, and the shock of battles between brothers, each willing to die for his idea, had desolated every home in the land. Lincoln voiced the first and greatest necessity to save the Union in these memorable words:

I would save the Union. I would save it the shortest way under the Constitution. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object in this struggle is to save the Union, and is not either to save or to destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slaves, I would do it, and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it, and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it, and if I could save it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that.

He stood like a rock against abalitionists and redicals who

He stood like a rock against abolitionists and radicals who would have him try to free the slaves at a time when public sentiment would not have sustained him and the loss of Union supporters would have been fatal, but when all saw it was necessary to save the Union he issued the emancipation proclamation.

The success of the national cause in the civil war placed the Union upon firmer foundation, to be made secure for all time by the reconstruction of the States and the acceptance by those in rebellion of their equal enjoyment of American citizenship and unity in loyalty for the old flag. Our Government was then the least in power and consideration among nations. But it advanced by leaps and bounds until at the peace of Portsmouth between Russia and Japan, brought about by President Roosevelt, we took front rank and won the right and recognition of voice and vote in all matters affecting the welfare of the world.

People prosper and nations advance according to the wisdom of the policies and measures which govern them. The waste of war must be supplied by credit and money. The country required revenue bills to enlarge its income; the development of its resources to furnish the basis for increased taxation, and a currency system in harmony with great industrial nations. It was in these fields that Senator Allison did most wise, beneficent, and farreaching work. Happily his State of Iowa, appreciating his value to the country, kept him continuously in the Senate. The record and rewards of his career were due to neither luck nor chance. He won and held place and increasing power by ceaseless industry, rare judgment, tact, which amounted to genius, and the graces which command loyalty and love. In the House he was on the Committee of Ways and Means and in the Senate, for twenty-six years a member of the Committee on Finance, and for thirty years on the Committee on Appropriations, and for twenty-five years its chairman. In these positions he had always before him problems of revenue and expenditures of the Government upon which rest its stability, credit, and prosperity. They appealed to him because of natural gifts for these questions, and by study and experience he acquired such mastery over them that he became an acknowledged authority and accepted leader.

He believed that industrial independence and internal development, increase in national wealth, and a higher standard of living for labor than ever known, could be had only by a protective tariff. He was the clearest and soundest of the many able men who have contributed to the legislation or literature of this question. The Morrill bill, enacted in 1861, had performed invaluable service in replenishing the Treasury during the war and stimulating production and manufactures after. But the marvelous growth of our industries in both volume and variety called for a new adaptation to present needs. McKinley was the unrivaled expounder and advocate of the merits of the measure which bore his name, it was the ripe learning and constructive genius of Allison which framed and perfected the law. He pointed out the weakness which was afterwards developed in the Wilson bill, and his report warned Congress and the country of the disastrous results which followed its enactment. The universal recognition of his talents for initiative and upbuilding made him a member of the subcommittee which perfected the Dingley bill, which has been in force since 1897, and to him was assigned the charge of its passage in the Senate. In this brief review is seen the master mind and skilled hand in legislation for the tariff during the thirty-five years it was on trial. He saw his policy at times crippled, and once nearly destroyed; but with faith which never wavered and courage which never faltered he plead with the people and labored with their representatives until the fruition of his opinions and experience had ripened into law. He lived to witness for ten years the most extraordinary progress and prosperity ever known in any land-the result, as he believed, of the triumph of his principles.

But the Senator's activities were in every branch of revenue legislation. He prepared in 1868 the internal-revenue law which with few modifications is still in force and with the least possible burden upon the people yields large returns to the Alexander Hamilton was the greatest of constructive states-en. With little of precedent for guidance, he formed out of chaos a model system of constitutional government and devised the details for its administration. He was the father of protective principles, and his report on that subject has been the inspiration of all subsequent discussion and legislation. His methods and rules for the management of our customs remained unchanged for a century. Primitive conditions in the importation of foreign goods had grown and expanded until commerce had so far outgrown the regulations which had controlled it for a hundred years that modifications adapted to modern situations were necessary. The work had been self which, without change, has been the guide of our customsrevenue service from 1890 until today.

Senator Allison was a disciple of Hamilton. He revered his memory and was a profound student of his works. At a time when the people were wildly following the ignis fatuus of visionary finance, Allison kept his faith in sound economic princi-He early saw that material development and progress were temporary and delusive unless based upon a stable and unfluctuating standard of value. We came out of the civil war with our currency upon foundations as insecure as the earthquake soil of Messina, and feverish speculation followed by disastrous panics was our perpetual peril. A loyal sentiment that the irredeemable greenback had saved the Union nurtured faith in fiat money and the virtues of the paper mill in maintaining values. This and the silver heresy threatened political oblivion to all who opposed them. The Senator's fight for sound money illustrated the practical ability of his statesmanship. He could bow to the storm and not be bent. He saw no merit in so attempting to stem the tide as to be swept into outer darkness and lost to sight and memory. He preferred to go with and guide it—the most difficult of tasks. It required from 1865 to 1875 before the people could be educated to belief in a specie basis. That decade was as full of peril to our industries as the civil war had been to our nationality. The resumption act was the work of John Sherman, but his ablest and most efficient associate was Senator Allison.

That law made our depreciated currency as good as gold in theory, but not in fact. The enormous output of silver alarmed the mining industry because the supply was exceeding the demand. Besides the selfish interests of the mine owners, some of the best minds in the country became advocates of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. The farmer was persuaded it would double the price of his products and pay off his mortgages; the debtor that it would reduce the amount of his loans, the workman that it would double his wages, and by the mysterious alchemy of a government stamp, its purchasing power would not diminish with its falling price. Both Houses of Congress were captured by its fallacies and popularity. Popular passions had not run so high since the civil war. Wise and prudent men saw that the success of the scheme would drive out gold, put the country on a silver basis, and after a wild carnival end in bankruptcy. Senator Allison saved the situation by securing the assent of a majority for a limited coinage of silver, bought by and belonging to the Government. The working of this compromise demonstrated the folly of a double standard and brought the people to see that except the opinion of the world could be changed we must come to gold. In hastening that event our friend performed invaluable and lasting service. successful legislator must adjust the bill he proposes or has in charge to the diverse views of his colleagues without impairing its essential object. He yields, harmonizes, and conciliates, but gets in the main what he wants at the time or gains a step for further advance when the majority are brought to his view.

Senator Allison was past master of that art. He knew the Senate. Its capricious moods were his opportunity. His patience was never exhausted, the serenity of his temper never ruffled. He could grant to an adversary an amendment with such grace and deference to superior judgment that the flattered enemy accepted a few suggestions from the master as a tribute to his talents. The post-mortem revealed his mistake,

As in the gold standard, so whenever a principle was involved, the Senator's mind was clear from the beginning; but it required, step by step, twenty years before the idea captured the country. The strongest criticism of his career was his willingness to compromise; but the Constitution of the United States was a compromise between the large and smaller States. The Missouri Compromise of Henry Clay in 1820 was the salvation of the Union—secession then would have succeeded; but forty years devoted to instilling into youth love for the Nation and the flag, and the growth in population and resources of the free States welded the Union beyond the possibility of disruption.

The country reunited in faith and loyalty, the industrial and financial systems which had commanded his unequaled talents for a third of a century triumphantly established and working out the beneficent results of prosperity, production, and happiness upon which he had based faith and prophecy, the old statesman might have been content.

Nations, like individuals, "pass this way but once." opportunities at the milestones are lost or won. The triumphs of one generation make trouble for the next. Progress and deto modern situations were necessary. The work had been undertaken many times and failed, and was finally placed in the hands of Senator Allison. After two years of patient effort he succeeded in enacting a law wholly prepared by himgreat systems. Evils existed in some of them which angered the people against them all. Government ownership or government control were leading issues. The President and his advisers prepared a large scheme of government control. It was threatened, on the one hand, by conservative forces which fight all change in existing conditions, and radical reformers who would put on the measure drastic amendments so farreaching and confiscatory as to involve years of litigation and invite an adverse decision from the Supreme Court. The veteran victor of a hundred legislative battlefields was called into council. The suggestions of Senator allison perfected and passed the rate bill. It has stood the test of the courts. It has largely eliminated the evils of railway management, and the people and investors recognize its wisdom.

Senator Allison was never spectacular. He was modest and retiring to a degree. Many of his colleagues filled large space with their speeches in the Congressional Record, while his monument was in the statute books. Because of the radicalism of their proposals, or their eloquence in debate, or their manufacture of epigrams, others had headlines and columns in the press, while this tireless and unheralded architect of the public welfare was standing guard over the Treasury or making laws which marked epochs in our history.

He rarely missed a vote. When the bell rang for a roll call, coming from his constant labor in the room of the Committee on Appropriations, he was among the first to enter the Senate. His name was next to the top of the list. He never waited to find out how the question was going, but answered promptly, and that answer often decided the fate of the measure. He had the courage of his convictions and not of a majority behind him.

He represented an agricultural State whose people often differed with him on economic and financial questions. But a singularly broad-minded and intelligent constituency recognized his honesty, character, and greatness, and loyally returned him again and again to the seat in which he shed such luster upon Iowa. His closing hours were passed in the supreme happiness that after thirty-five years of continuous service in the Senate and after passing the limit of fourscore the people had commissioned him for another term.

If, as I believe, those who meet in the activities of this life are reunited hereafter, it was a wonderful band of immortals who greeted Allison. President Lincoln had consulted him on measures for raising money to carry on the war; Johnson on constitutional amendments, civil rights, and general amnesty; Grant on the reconstruction of the States, finance, and a gov ernment for the District of Columbia, still working satisfactorily and wholly devised by Allison; Hayes on the resumption of specie payments; Arthur on the policy of a tariff commission; Harrison on the McKinley tariff legislation and closer relations between the republics of the Western Hemisphere by a Pan-American Congress; Cleveland on the repeal of the purchase clause of the Sherman silver law, and McKinley on tariff, currency, the gold standard, and grave questions arising out of the acquisition and government of Porto Rico and the Philippines, all of them era-making measures. Three of these Presidents had urgently invited him to join their cabinets, and twice the Presidency had been almost within his grasp. When he first obtained the floor in Congress, he addressed Speaker Schuyler Colfax, and when he spoke last, forty-five years afterwards, Vice-President FAIRBANKS in the chair recognized the Senator from Iowa. Seward, Chase, and Stanton, John Sherman, James G. Blaine, and Thaddeus Stevens were his associates and intimates. When the future historian writes the story of this remarkable period and portrays the actors in that great national drama who contributed to its distinction, he will place among the few in the front rank the name of William B. Allison.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, fullness of years, great work well done, wealth of honors, the respect of a Nation—all these were Senator Allison's when that kindly angel men call "Death" folded him in the arms of rest and bore him to the Father and to recompense.

Older friends have spoken of his labors for the Republic; I shall not go over that again. In the country's written laws and accomplished purposes his wisdom lives. Sound and farseeing counsel is as real a power as fleets afloat or armies in the field. It is more—it is the mind that guides all the material forces of the world. Sure judgment was the strength and worth of this great public man.

More than most, he knew the value of patience. Panting eagerness nor stolid "do-lessness" did not disturb his calm. He had forbearance alike for those who would drive the ship too fast for safety and for those who would put out the fires beneath her boilers. He knew that both were partly right and both were partly wrong; and he saw that from the conflict a steady force would come that, uniting the wisdom in both views, would bring the vessel safe to port. And so his was the statesmanship of the moderate, and therefore the statesmanship of the effective.

I never saw Senator Allison a single time that I did not think of those great words of Emerson:

Teach me thy mood, O patient stars
That climb each night the ancient sky.
And leave on space no trace, no scars,
No sign of age, no fear to die.

Sitting at the feet of this Gamaliel of the Senate one felt that from his earliest youth he had made these immortal lines his nightly prayer and that the responding heavens had answered it. For he was never irritated. He stood on heights from which he could see all opinions and behold the Supreme Intelligence fitting them together. It was this broad vision that made him so valuable as an agent of that Higher Power which in the end marshals all forces for the final general good of man.

With our narrower outlook and heated with zeal for our smaller views, many of us feel that unless these views, and these alone, prevail the country is lest; and this is well, for without the fire of faith in our own thought no headway is made. And yet, when all is done, we find what we thought to be different and hostile plans have, by some mysterious power, been woven together in harmonious design.

And so we come to know that hospitality to ideas is the largest wisdom. At our intellectual firesides an idea always should be welcome; a fact always should be an honored guest. No matter whence thought or knowledge come, no matter in what garb they are clothed, bid them enter and turn them not away, for we may be entertaining angels unawares. Crabbed prejudice is the enemy of progress and truth; kindly patience is the friend of both. And so the kindly and patient man is he whom both progress and truth befriend. And such was Senator Allison.

Tell me-

Said the ancient ruler to his wise men-tell me one single thing that is true forever. Give me but one sentence that time will not prove false.

And the wise men answered: And this, too, shall pass away.

At first it seems that this is so. Men go and are forgotten, no matter how great they are; governments decay, races perish—all seem to pass away. But they do not pass, in very truth. The noblest thought in all this universe is that each man and woman, humble or high placed, pours his or her life into those supreme plans which live forever. And so, with the sure knowledge that whether our work be small or, like Senator Allison's, be great, it still is more lasting than the stars. Let us go forward with humility that we can do so little, but with pride and thankfulness that we have been chosen to do our small part as servants of the Master Workman.

With such belief and wisdom our friend and leader finished his tasks, and at the end kindly patience and forbearing tolerance were his companions still. From earthly vision all of us are going, and quickly; we know not which one of us is soonest to be called.

"Spin, spin, Clotho spin! Lachesis, twist! and Atropos, sever"—only fate can tell who shall be next. But when we go, may each of us go as went Senator Allison, our work well done and manfully, leaving behind no hate; our finished lives like his, a blessing and an example; and having his faith that whatever befalls still—

God's in His heaven: All's right with the world.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, in response to the invitation of Senator Dolliver, who has spoken so eloquently and feelingly, and in obedience to the promptings of my own heart, I wish to offer a few words in testimony of my appreciation of the life and character of Senator Allison. I can not add to the story of his life, for it has been told by those who have been in closer touch with it. I can not extol more fittingly his virtues and achievements than has been done by those who have sat side by side with him for many years in these chambers of legislation and who have borne with him the burdens, endured with him the criticism, and shared with him the approval of the great American people.

Ordinarily the disparity of our ages and the comparative briefness of our association in public life would dictate that I should respect his memory in silence while others spoke. But, Mr. President, there were ties that bound him to me in life, and those memories impel me to speak a word of love and appreciation now. I can not remember a time when his name was not familiar to me, nor a moment when his life was not an inspiration to me. The State that honored him so long was my birthplace, among the people that loved him so well are the friends and acquaintances of my youth, and in the soil of the Commonwealth where we buried him rest the remains of my loved ones that have gone beyond. And to-day, Mr. President, there are still in that State those near and dear to me who would have me speak for them, if not for myself, of half a century of association and affection almost filial. And, Mr. President, I may also very appropriately remind Senators that Senator Allison was especially near and dear to many of the citizens of my own State. Nebraska has drawn from every State in the Union and from every country in the world to people her prairies, but owing to her proximity, as well as the similarity of physical conditions, Iowa has furnished an unusually large quota of our population. When the great army of pioneers from that State crossed the Missouri River they brought with them a pride in Senator Allison, whose career was just beginning, and which they have followed affectionately for forty years. His friendship is among the fond memories of many of them, and his life has been an inspiration to many more who were not fortunate in a personal acquaintance.

And as I have listened to these eulogies to-day, Mr. President, my mind has traveled back to the earlier days of my own life, for I have heard from the lips of his distinguished colleagues in this great Chamber here the same sweet story of his kindness and honorableness, of his patience and energy, of his high-mindedness and his devotion to duty, that I heard as a boy around the fireside of my old Iowa home. From Senator Allison's life there are many lessons that we may learn; in fact, there seems no virtues as a public man and a good citizen that he did not possess. Patience, perseverence, devotion, courage, integrity—he had them all. Bombast, deceit, treachery, jealousy, haughtiness—he lacked them all. His power was love, not fear; faithfulness to duty, not sordid ambition. Some men have won the applause of their fellow-men by fear; some have won it by power; some have won it by rare ability and brilliancy of speech; but good old Senator Allison won it with love. His kindliness of heart and fraternal sympathy attracted him to all men. At home and abroad, in Iowa and in Washington, in the palace and in the cottage, forty years ago and until death called him home, people loved him.

Mr. President, those of us who attended his funeral learned. perhaps for the first time, that nearly all his dear ones had preceded him in death, and yet we remember also that his mourners were legion. From every part of his Commonwealth; aye, from the remotest portions of the Republic, there came men to pay the last sad tribute of love. Every State in the Union is indebted to Iowa for giving to the country William B. Allison, and one of the bright spots in her escutcheon forever is his honor and his fame. He was honored by a State and he honored a Nation. His fame was broader than his State, his rank among men was higher than the position he held, and his honor was greater than the honor of his office. Not all men who have been honored have been honorable, for public life is honorable to such only as honor it, and the scroll of fame is for those only who can write their own names upon Public life makes some men famous and others infamous; some men noble and others base and ignoble. Holding public office is only an opportunity, and belongs to no man who does not feel its responsibility and who is not determined to measure up to its obligations.

It is a means and not an end; for while it affords opportunity, it carries no guarantee. It opens the way, but bears no bouquets; it offers a throne, but never lays a crown. True, it may not always have been so esthetically contemplated; it may have been given at times as a decoration or a prize for ignoble things; it may have been sought as the end, with little concern as to the means employed. Men may have been elected without qualification for its duties and without purpose of qualifying for them, but in the end the prize is cheap and valueless unless attended with honorable purpose, lofty ideals, and sacred devotion It is not unjust to any man to say that American history affords no career longer in time, more successful in achievement, higher in ideal, purer in motive, and more beloved in memory than that of Senator Allison. For more than forty years he bore the burdens of his country, and upon his name there is no blemish and upon his honor there is no shame. He dispensed the people's millions, and upon his reputation no "awkward aspersion hangs." Between the people's extravagance and the people's purse he stood, and during all the years that he directed the appropriations there was no deficit in the Public Treasury. He saw the ordinary expenditures of the Government grow from sixty millions to more than six hundred millions, but not a dollar of deficiency or of misappropriation reflects upon his judgment and integrity.

As I have contemplated the more than forty years of his magnificent public career, I have thought of the growth of the Republic in that time and of the obligation to the men of his generation. What years this last half century have been; what visions he saw and what dreams he realized; what enormous tasks have been accomplished and what stupendous problems have been solved. In those years we have extended our territory, multiplied our resources, trebled our population, quadrupled our railroad miles, multiplied our foreign commerce by six and our domestic commerce by ten. We have watered the prairies, drained the swamps, and harnessed the pent-up energy of the mountain. We have peopled the prairies with cities and congested the cities with the people's enterprises. Inventive genius has revolutionized industry and mechanical development has multiplied the people's power. From inconsequence internationally, we have become the political masters of the world; and contemporaneous with it all, we trace the evolution of so-cial and commercial and political ideals unto the magnificent The demand upon the genius and constandard of to-day. science of men has never been greater, in my opinion, than during those prolific years that Senator Allison exerted his great influence upon the affairs of men.

It required cool heads and strong hearts, big minds and steady nerves to pilot our ship of state during this eventful half century. If men were more patriotic in the olden days of the Nation, it is only in the meaning that we give the word, if they were wiser it is only in our estimate of the relative importance of the problems they solved. I confess that to my mind the patriotism that establishes a flag is of no higher order than the patriotism that sustains it and enlarges it and multiplies its significance in the power and opportunity and possibility of the people that it stands for. Popular government is not preserved by any different patriotism than conceives it. me it required no greater wisdom and genius to write a constitution than to develop a continent under it, assure its perpetuity and maintain its integrity of purpose and direct its successful operation. It was during the life of Senator Allison and to which he gave so much of his great intellect that we unburdened ourselves of traditions and prejudices and provincialisms that hobbled us in our earlier national life and became, in fact, the mighty nation that the founders of the Republic ordained that we should be. It was during those years that we threw off the yoke of colonialism, brushed aside the obstacles of jealousy and sectionalism, made facts of the ideals of the Constitution, and started out upon a conquest commercial, industrial, and political, unequaled in its achievement in all the ages that the world has stood. We adjudicated many of the conflicts of thought that formerly handicapped us and developed a system of practical jurisprudence for political and industrial purposes. Well may we pause in our triumphant march of national supremacy upon this sad occasion and reflect upon the course we have traveled and pay due homage to the generation of men who piloted our craft in what has been the greatest half century of all the world's history. Mr. President, in my opinion in all the annuls of history there is portrayed no people anywhere that equaled in valor and self-sacrifice and energy and perseverance, and lofty ideals and noble purposes, the men and the women of the last fifty years. Well may we pay a tribute to our fathers and gather inspiration if we can for the performance of our duty in the day of our responsibility.

I have thus spoken, Mr. President, prompted not by sentiment alone, although I confess the thought tends to make one sentimental; nor, indeed, Mr. President, have I spoken because of apprehension for the future. But we are so young and vigorous as a nation, so hopeful and buoyant as individuals, and so proud and victorious as a people that, like boys at play, we almost defy the laws of health and safety, and in our manhood we almost forget the guiding hand that was around us and about us directing our toddling step, shielding us from danger, and perfecting us in the power and glory of our matured manhood. I shall not be understood as despairing of the future, for, in the appropriate words of another, "To despair of America would be to despair of humanity." I am optimistic upon the growing virtues and capacity of men, and believe that each generation is an improvement upon anything that has gone before it. That is the highest tribute to any generation, that it left the world and mankind better than it found them. But aside from that, I have such faith in an all-wise and all-sufficient Providence that has hitherto attended our course, that gave to us the constructive genius of Washington, the preserving genius of Lincoln, and the promotive genius of Senator Allison and his contemporaries, to believe that we shall not lack in men of power and conscience to perpetuate the ideals that have hitherto directed our achievements and shaped our destiny.

I presume Senator Allison had some faults, although it always seemed to me that they were less obtrusive and less complained of than those of any other man I ever knew. I presume he had his shortcomings, although they were not greatly apparent. I presume that during his long and eventful career he has felt the sting of ingratitude and the heartburnings of unjust criticism. Such is the penalty of public life, and such it will always be.

If such penalties were visited upon him, he bore them bravely and uncomplainingly, and in the grandeur of his stature of mind and heart he arose above them and the authors of them. He was too big to be mean to his enemies, too big to be impatient with his traducers, too big to denounce his calumniators, and too big to quarrel with them. He was forgiving when others were vengeful, unrelenting when others were dismayed, thoughtful when others were noisy, and tolerant when others were extreme. He never leaped without looking; he never condemned without reason nor acted without knowing. It was these qualities of mind and heart that retained for him the love and loyalty of his people at home and qualified him for the great achievements of his life work.

We may erect monuments to his memory, and we may extol his virtues, but, Mr. President, the impress of his memory and virtues will live long after our little monuments shall crumble and our poor words shall be forgotten. More enduring than anything that we can do is the monument of love that he builded for himself in the grateful hearts of the American people, and more lasting than what we shall here say is his own indelible inscription upon the institutions and laws of his country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, as I have listened to the eloquent eulogies on the late Senator Allison, I have thought many times during the afternoon of the great value of such a personality to the world, and I have congratulated myself over and over again that it was my privilege to personally know this truly great man.

During the years of my public service I have heard much praise of dead colleagues, but never such a wealth of touching eulogy more appropriately bestowed than upon Iowa's noble son.

I have recalled to my mind the beautiful relationship existing between Senator Allison and all his colleagues. That kind, gentle, helpful, lovable nature went out to the younger Members of this body with unstinted generosity and marked effect, and I do not wonder that the older men here came to love him so dearly and have been so deeply moved by his departure.

But, Mr. President, I have also thought many times during this day of the consolation and the comfort that it must afford the brilliant young colleague of that great statesman to feel that during all the years of their association he was so loyal, so kind, so considerate, so sympathetic with every aspiration and desire of his aged colleague. True and loving to the end, under all conditions and at all times, in sickness and in health, comforting him in his last and lonely battle with the dread reaper, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver] filled the final hours of his friend with a radiance and perfume difficult to describe, and the gentle ministrations which we witnessed here will for many years to come constitute one of the priceless traditions of this Chamber.

Senator Allison's life was a struggle. Born in poverty, he fought his own way up the ladder to the topmost round, never forgetting the steps by which he climbed. His life gives the lie to the pretense of men that there are no longer opportunities in America for the humble and unpretentious. His brilliant example is an inspiration to us all. I hope the great body of the American people may draw from it the lessons which it richly affords, and that in the estimate of the people public men will be treated with kindlier consideration and more accurate judgment by reason of this noble and unselfish life, consecrated to the general weal.

Mr. President, I attended the funeral services of the late Senator at his home city. I witnessed with my own eyes the depth of feeling which was dowered upon him. I saw the streets filled with those who loved him, standing in silent testimony to their deep affection, paying the last great tribute to his matchless life. I saw his body lowered to its last resting place and heard the lamentations of those he served. Upon that historic mound, which overlooks the valley and by which courses the Mississippi in its silent march to the sea, WILLIAM BOYD ALLISON sleeps the long sleep. I have wondered many times whether, in the alchemy of nature, there was to come again a man of similar mold.

It is said of Napoleon that after the battle of Toulon, weary and tired and unable longer to withstand the call for rest, he sat down upon the battlefield, and sitting fell asleep. The old guard of the Little Corporal formed a hollow square about him and watched with patient vigil until the rest came to his tired eyes. So in the State that Allison honored so highly, as time began to furrow his brow and rechisel his faultless features, as his giant frame gave way under the weight of great responsibilities, the old guard of Iowa formed a hollow square about him and watched over him and protected his illustrious name with a wealth of manly affection and genuine enthusiasm which must have rendered his last days sweet and choice indeed.

All of us must grow old, the snow must fall upon our heads;

it is so ordained; but must we falter and say-chaucer, at Woodstock with the nightingales, At sixty wrote the Canterbury Tales; Goethe at Weimar, tolling to the last; Completed Faust when eighty years were past. These are indeed exceptions; but they show How far the gulf-stream of our youth may flow Into the arctic regions of our lives, Where little else than life itself survives. As the barometer foretells the storm While still the skies are clear, the weather warm, So something in us, as old age draws near, Betrays the pressure of the atmosphere. The nimble mercury, ere we are aware, Descends the elastic ladder of the air; The telliale blood in artery and vein Sinks from its higher levels in the brain; Whatever poet, orator, or sage May say of it, old age is still old age. It is the waning, not the crescent moon; The dusk of evening, not the blaze of noon.

And as the evening twilight fades away The sky is filled with stars, invisible by day.

The life of this great statesman, simple, pure, modest, and unaffected, kindly, gentle, and just, is a benediction to us all. He has crossed the great river, made wider by our affections and deepened by our tears. The world is poorer for his going, and heaven has a new attraction for us all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, perhaps there is no greater distinction, no higher honor within the reach of men in these days than that which may be gathered in the faithful discharge of official duties. It seems to me that the man who takes office under a republic, modest as the emoluments must be, onerous and arduous as the duties are, and, with an eye single to the honor and glory of his State and his Government, works patiently on to the close of his earthly existence, is entitled in every sense to the commendation and love of his fellow-men. He has given to his country all—his time, his ability, the benefit of his watchful, untiring leadership, the uplifting and protecting influence of his patriotism. It must be said that when the end comes, the highest obligation which one owes to his country has in full been liquidated.

Senator Allison met in full measure this high standard of public duty. He came to the public service in early manhood. He gave to the public service not only the best, but all the years of his life—resting not even for the final journey, although understanding well that notice of the departure had been served. Here, bowed and worn and broken, he died, active, vigilant, and faithful to the very last. Holding to the end the gratitude and love of his great State, the admiration and confidence of the Nation, and the trust and veneration of his colleagues, he passed quietly from our midst as one well worn and weary with the work of the day retires for the slumbers of the night. The most welcome death to the veteran must be the death which finds the armor on.

Senator William B. Allison was born March 2, 1829, two days prior to the first inauguration of Andrew Jackson as President of the United States. At the same time, out in the wilderness of the West, there was trudging alongside of his ox team, searching out a new home in his adopted State of Illinois, one who was in due course of time to become the most remarkable figure of the centuries, the dominating influence of whose indescribable genius was to change the current of history and rearrange the forces of American civilization.

The historian, commenting upon the election of Andrew Jackson, tells us that it marked the dawn of a new era in American politics—the era of control of our politics by the masses in the true sense of the term. A strange heresy had existed among some of the leaders of prior days. It was extensively believed that only the highly educated and the property holders should have a voice in the Government. It has been said by one high in the councils of the Nation, "The people should have as little to do as may be about the Government." By another, "The people do not want virtue, but are the dupes of pretended patriots." And yet another, "It would be as unnatural to refer the choice of a proper character for Chief Magistrate to the people as it would be to refer the trial of colors to a blind man." Most of the States had provided a property qualification for voters.

The election of Jackson marked the first real uprising and victory of the forces which rejected those doctrines—the first signal triumph of those to whom reference was often made as the "uneducated" and "propertyless rabble." And, strange as it may seem, this conflict was to go on in different ways, by instrumentalities peculiar to the choosing of a power the secret of whose counsels we can not know, until the country boy, raised from amid the "uneducated" and "propertyless" masses to be their Chief Magistrate and devoted friend, was upon the field of Gettysburg, with slavery in its last throes writhing at his feat, to announce the fulfillment of this dispensation in words that still live and will never die: "The government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Under the inspiration of these sublime teachings Senator Allison grew to manhood. In the midst of the culminating scenes which made these doctrines the universal principles of the Republic, he prepared to enter public life, and in the heroic days of their final embodiment into our great Charter he reached the full stature of American statesmanship. Thus prepared and equipped, when the Nation, reunited and her people wholly free, entered upon that period of her marvelous material growth; when deserts were to become empires of wealth and trackless plains be changed into great States; when the restless pioneer should unlock the imprisoned riches of the mountains, and railroads and telegraphs and telephones should compound us into one compact and indomitable industrial force, and all this bring up for solution the complex problems of modern legislation, he was to become a conspicuous and masterful figure. and conservative, wakeful and resourceful, an adept in the science of legislation, and a marvel in the adjusting of the differences of men, he was to become for years a leader in the greatest legislative body in the world. There was nothing here of moment during his long service concerning which men did not seek his counsel; there was no vexed problem, no profound question of policy but his experience and his wisdom, his patience and his patriotism could master.

There is a story in classic literature that a sculptor while patiently working with lingering anxiety upon an obscure portion of a statue was asked why he dwelt so long and with such care upon that portion of the work which perhaps no human eye would ever behold. The inspired artist replied:

This hidden finish excites most my zeal, for here the gods will look for the evidence of fidelity and genius upon which they will either deny or give to me immortality.

One of the older Senators said the other day we should hang upon these walls his picture painted by some great artist, and perhaps his beloved State may some time conclude to place for him a monument here in the Capitol; but his claim to immortality is to be found hidden away among the statutes, found here in the long story of the faithful, painstaking service, where without ostentation or acclaim he lingered with uncommon zeal to the hour when the last session closed at which he was permitted to attend. Here is his monument; he erected it himself, and no one will erect another half so lasting as the one which grew to such sublime proportions under his own hand and direction.

Mr. President, generously each generation remembers and recounts the achievements of the heroes of war. The mysterious power of the martial spell sometimes sleeps, but never dies. Yonder in the hall of fame the soldier and the statesman stand side by side, but the visitor lingers longest before the figures which call up the great battle scenes of the Republic. We do not complain that it is so; but can there be a finer fiber of manhood, a service to one's country calling for a keener sense of duty, a more robust and resolute courage, a higher order of patriotism than are revealed and exemplified in the great careers of civil life? The questions and problems dealt with involve the physical and moral well-being of countless thousands. The enemies of the Nation with whom they must contend do not march under foreign colors, but subtle, specious, and insatiable throng, in robes of citizenship, the corridors of the Capitol. It is not a question of interposing skill and valor against an open enemy, but of standing guard in every hour against the power and influence of those who would gratify personal ambition to the disadvantage of the Government and the permanent loss of the common rights and privileges of the people. It involves the almost superhuman task of reconciling the conflicting demands of the great commercial interests that industry may have its just reward and every element of thrift and frugality their compensation. In the halls of legislation, more than any other place in the world, government fights its battles with selfishness and greed, with reckless expenditure, with special privileges, a conflict never over and never won, a conflict calling for poise of character, steadfastness of purpose, and a patriotism as loyal as ever displayed on the field of battle. A man who occupies a place of responsibility and command in such a conflict for thirty-five years and passes on without reproach and unscathed has earned glory enough for one man. His place in history is secure.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I rise to say the last word upon this occasion, after listening to the beautiful tributes that have been inspired by affectionate hearts, illuminated by loving memories and vivified by eloquent lips, I am conscious of the despair which must always be felt when the hand attempts to gild the true gold or lay its crude colors upon the lovely shades of the lily. In the few moments at my command I shall not undertake to review the life of William B. Allison. That work has already been faithfully done, and I venture to view the subject from another standpoint.

Every day and every hour somewhere the flowers of affection are being laid upon the last resting places of those who have gone to their reward upon the other shore. Every day and every hour somewhere sad hearts are pouring out their stores of love upon the memories of those who have discharged nature's last and greatest debt. Notwithstanding, however, the universality of the ceremony through which we are now passing, I think it may be truthfully declared that this hour is unlike the hours which humanity ordinarily gives to the retrospect of an honorable useful life. It does not often happen that in rendering a just tribute to the memory of one whose activities have forever ceased, we are compelled to survey the history of a long and overwhelmingly important period in the history of our country's affairs. Generally it is appropriate upon such an occasion to do no more than to touch with loving tenderness the character and quality of the man. In this instance, however, the whole scene changes, and there rises up before us, whether we will it so or not, forty-five years of a nation's life, years that have no parallels, no companions in all the annals of the earth.

Standing here and looking backward over these years, I can see, it is true, the noble and commanding figure of the man whose work we are commemorating, clothed in the garb of his integrity of purpose, his openness of heart, and his amiability of temperament, but in the foreground I see more clearly still the procession of events covering nearly a half century of time; and in this march, the most wonderful which civilization has ever undergone, one man has kept step day after day and year after year, steadying the column here, closing the broken ranks there, and cheering and encouraging it everywhere.

To have merely lived in manhood from March 4, 1863, the day upon which William B. Allison entered the Congress of the United States, to August 4, 1908, the day upon which he died, as a citizen of the United States was to enjoy an opportunity the like of which the world never gave to mortal man. To have borne a part, however obscure, in the drama of self-government throughout these years, as the Republic staggered under the blow of the civil war, as it felt its way through the perils of reconstruction, as it readjusted its financial policy, as it grappled with the problems which growth, prosperity, and wealth created, was to be distinguished above the men of any other time. To have been a prominent and conspicuous leader, to have been a safe and valued counsellor, to have been strong and helpful in determining the fortunes of the Nation throughout these years in which we emerged from obscurity and securely occupied the highest station known in the history of mankind, was to attain the loftiest pinnacle of human honor, and this is the crown which a just and grateful people will bestow upon the memory of William B. Allison.

Of his specific work in the House of Representatives for eight years, and of his greater work in the Senate for nearly thirty-six continuous years, I shall not speak. I must view his public service as a whole; and looking at it from that exalted standpoint, I do not hesitate to say that his name is deeply engraven upon the tablets of fame. I rarely venture upon an analysis of a claim for greatness, simply because greatness is incapable of analysis just as it is incapable of comparison. Without violating this rule, I may say, however, that safe and permanent progress in a country like ours requires varying types of men. It requires the quick bold leader who does not reflect long, who reaches his conclusions with a rush, and who presses incessantly on because he is so sure that he is right that he knows that all persons who differ from him must be wrong. Such a man is oftentimes in error, sometimes intolerant, but without him the Republic could not live. There is another man equally important to the welfare of the people. It is the man who gathers up all these proposals for advance and for change, who reflects upon them with exceeding care and deliberation, who discovers their weaknesses and supplements their imperfections, who molds differences into harmonious action, who bridges the distance which separates those who insist upon the quickstep all the time from those who want to camp all the time; and such a man was Senator Allison. I do not attempt to rank these types. Suffice it to say that both being essential in the economy of the world, both extort our praise and admiration.

The Senate never had a Member more deeply attached to his associates or more devoted to the work of his office than Mr. I remember one incident of this attachment and de-ALLISON. votion which greatly impressed me. About the first of the year 1897 Mr. McKinley, the President-elect, commissioned me to bear an invitation to Senator Allison to become the Secretary of State in the incoming administration, and he enjoined upon me strongly the necessity of suggesting to Senator Allison that it was his duty to aid the administration by accepting the place offered to him. In a long personal interview, I pressed this phase of the matter as I had been asked to do; and I shall never forget the reply I received. It was a tender expression of the affection he felt for his fellow-members in the Senate, of the friendships and intimacies that had grown up through a long course of years, of the faith and trust he had in them and they in him, of the impossibility of severing the bonds which time had knitted, and the ease and pleasure with which he performed the duties so familiar; and having summed up all these things, he looked me squarely in the eye and asked me this question: "Do you now think it is my duty to go from the Senate to a new field of activity?" and I unhesitatingly answered him, "No."

He was a gentle man in the truest sense of these words. He was a courteous man, not only to those of high degree, but of low degree as well. He was a modest man and vaunted himself not at all. He was a gracious, kindly man, and counted no labor too severe that promoted the welfare of his friends. was a learned man, for he not only studied the history of his country, but the greater part of it he had helped to make. He was an honest man, and did the right as it was given to him to see the right. His body rests in an honored grave, and his memory is not only a benediction to the people of his State, but is treasured throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Mr. President, as a further evidence of respect, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 8, 1909, at 12 o'clock m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25155. An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the con-currence of the House of Representatives was requested: S. 8603. An act for the relief of Mark Tomlinson;

S. 8708. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to Moores Creek Battle Ground Association;

S. 9036. An act providing for the disposition of the balance of the funds derived from the sale of town lots in the county seats of Caddo, Kiowa, and Comanche counties, Okla.;

S. 9039. An act to enable the Winnebago Indians to protect from overflow their tribal and allotted lands located within the boundaries of any drainage district in Nebraska; and

S. R. 126. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to donate six condemned cannon to the city of Cheyenne, Wyo.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution and bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. R. 126. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to donate six condemned cannon to the city of Cheyenne, Wyo.to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 9039. An act to enable the Winnebago Indians to protect from overflow their tribal and allotted lands located within the boundaries of any drainage district in Nebraska—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 9036. An act providing for the disposition of the balance of the funds derived from the sale of town lots in the county seats of Caddo, Kiowa, and Comanche counties, Okla.-to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 8708. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate two condemned cannon to Moores Creek Battle Ground Association—to the Committee on Military Affairs. S. 8603. An act for the relief of Mark Tomlinson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 27051. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish one condemned brass or bronze "Napoleon" gun, carriage, and cannon balls to the State of Iowa.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 16015. An act for the relief of Lafayette L. McKnight: H. R. 2952. An act for the relief of Chaplain Henry Swift, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. Army; H. R. 20171. An act to correct the military record of George

H. Tracy

H. R. 11460. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Houck; and H. R. 10752. An act to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells.

EXPENSES OF INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit the following Senate joint resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota reports from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, the following Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 122) to enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States March 4, 1909.

March 4, 1909.

Resolved, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States March 4, 1909, in accordance with such programme as may be adopted by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, appointed under a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, including the pay for extra police for three days, at $3 per day, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $16,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the usual resolution that is passed every four

Mr. TAWNEY. This is the usual resolution, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri. The amount, however, as passed by the Senate is larger than heretofore.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much larger? Mr. TAWNEY. Not much larger than the amount heretofore expended, but larger than the amount carried in the last appropriation. The appropriation for the last inauguration was $7,000, and a subsequent appropriation was made to meet a deficiency. The Superintendent of the Capitol informs me that an additional amount of $7,000 was expended and met by a subsequent appropriation. The platforms, I will say, for the accommodation of Congress and the committee have been gradually increasing in size at every succeeding inauguration.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why is that—on account of the price of lumber?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; on account of the size of the platforms. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought the gentleman said on account of the price.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I said on account of the size of the platforms, to accommodate a greater number of people for whom we have had to provide accommodations,

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As a matter of fact, is not that largely the reason why seats cost more—that lumber has gone up under the beneficent influences of the lumber trust?

Mr. TAWNEY. Lumber, I understand, is cheaper now than it has been for some time. I do not know anything about it myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that the reason why this appropriation is larger, and has to be larger, is, as I am told, because of the increased cost of labor and the increased cost of material and to have larger and better accommodations than heretofore.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I have here a memorandum furnished me by the Superintendent of the Capitol as to how the appropriations for this purpose four years ago and prior inaugurations were expended. It is as follows:

At the last three inaugurations the stand on the east front has been at least doubled each time, thereby increasing the cost. The appropriation last inauguration was $7,000, and a second appropriation of $2,000 was made for a special stand for Members of the House. I have found by experience that the $7,000 did not cover the expenses for maintaining the stands at the time. I spent about $5,000, all told, in other directions, for various barricades, protection railings, covering lawns, etc., which was paid out of the Capitol grounds money. Of this $16,000 about $10,000 will be applied to the stand, which is of 2,000 seating capacity larger than the former one; about $3,000 is necessary for barricades and other stands around the Capitol, and $2,000 for barricading various places in the Capitol itself, so that, instead of spending money out of the other appropriations, I ask for enough to cover the whole cost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THIRTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill providing for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, together with the President's veto, be referred to the Committee on the Census and printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the bill that provides for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and the President's veto be referred to the Committee on the Census and printed.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] a question? Will the gentleman state the reason why he has asked it to be referred? Inasmuch as it can not be amended by the committee, I see no reason for the reference.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For consideration. There are precedents for referring bills that have been returned-Mr. GILLETT. I understand that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER (continuing). Vetoed bills; and it will give the committee an opportunity to investigate and consider the objection of the President and report the bill back with such recommendations as they see fit to make. There is only one thing, perhaps, under the Constitution that the House can do, and that is to pass the bill, notwithstanding the objection of the President, or to refuse to do so; and I presume it would be within the province of the Committee on the Census to recom-mend that in view of the objection of the President the House do not pass the bill over the veto of the President. I have no doubt that the Committee on the Census would have that power. There is no reason at all for not referring this bill with the objection direct to the committee for consideration.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER.

The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARSONS. I wish to inquire whether it would be in order to move to amend the motion to refer by adding instructions to the Committee on the Census to report it forthwith by striking out the words "noncompetitive," in lines 20 and 21 of section 7?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman in a parliamentary inquiry must be in order. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor. It is for the House to determine by apt proceeding under the rules the course to pursue.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will answer in my time the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry. Such a motion as he proposes would be clearly out of order, because if the House can take only certain action outlined in the Constitution, it certainly has no power to instruct the Committee on the Census.

Now, I ask the previous question on the motion to refer.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PRINTING INVESTIGATION COMMISSION.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present to the House a letter from Senator Platt, chairman of the Printing Investigation Commission, transmitting to the House a report (No. 932) signed by four members of the commission, all the members excepting Mr. Finley and Senator Perkins, both of whom are out of the city. I am satisfied both would have signed the report had they been here, as they have been in entire harmony with the commission. I ask unanimous consent that the letter and report may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to receive the letter indicated, with the accompanying papers, and that it be referred to the Committee on Apparents. propriations. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration under the special order the bill H. R. 21929, being the act to amend an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on Saturday, February 6, it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H. R. 21929) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by an act approved February 5, 1903; and upon consideration of said bill it shall at once be in order to offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, providing for a repeal of the existing bankruptcy law, and the vote on said substitute amendment shall be taken before amendments to the text of the bill shall be in order. shall be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MANN. The bill has not been read.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that the regular course would be the reading of the bill. The bill was read, as follows:

bill (H. R. 21929) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by an act approved February 5, 1903.

Be it enacted, etc., That clause 5 of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by an act approved February 5, 1903, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as

Mr. TIRRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement, and then make a request, which will perhaps simplify the consideration of the bill. Under the order adopted for the consideration of this bill, it was provided that it should be in order-

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to interfere with the gentleman's observations, but I think we better proceed in accordance with the order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am trying to get right to that, if the gentleman will permit me just a moment. Under the order by which this bill is considered it is made in order to offer an amendment to repeal the bankruptcy law, and it is further provided that such amendment shall be considered first. Ordinarily under parliamentary practice the bill would first have to be perfected and then a motion in the nature of a substitute would have to be voted upon. Under the order the substitute comes first. I ask unanimous consent that on the substitute to be offered by the gentleman from Alabama, which is to repeal the existing bankrupt law, there be two hours' debate, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAY-TON] and one hour by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I prefer to ask unanimous consent under the order taken in my own right, and I, therefore, Mr. Speaker, under the special order, ask leave to offer the following as a substitute for the bill under the agreement. The agreement, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, is correct. We are to have an hour's debate on each side.

Mr. KEIFER. That has not been agreed upon yet. The SPEAKER. The special order is as follows:

and upon consideration of said bill it shall at once be in order to offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, providing for a repeal of the existing bankruptcy law, and the vote on said substitute amendment shall be taken before amendments to the text of the bill shall be

The gentleman desires recognition to offer the substitute under the order. Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. CLAYTON. In my own right.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have sent it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:
That the act approved July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," and all acts amendatory of such act, be, and are hereby, repealed: Provided, That nothing herein shall in any way affect proceedings under said act begun prior to the time this act takes effect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] is recognized.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. TIRRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to renew my request that there be two hours' debate on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and one hour by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that general debate shall be limited to two hours upon the substitute, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama and one hour by the gentleman from Massachu-

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to object to this, but I want to have some understanding about the discussion. This is one of the most important measures to the country that has been brought here at this session or for many sessions, and if we are only to have a few minues' talk upon the subject and then pass upon it-

If the gentleman will permit me Mr. SHERLEY.

The SPEAKER. This is a proposition to limit general debate upon the substitute which has just been offered. If the substitute is voted down, of course then under this special order amendments may be considered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER, The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAY-TON] is recognized under the special order, having offered the substitute.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the present bankruptcy law has stood upon the statute books longer than any similar statute. It has served its day of usefulness. It is now the subject of more complaint of abuse than any federal statute extant. say this, Mr. Speaker, with a knowledge, I believe, of the facts in the case. I say it because for a number of years I have in the case. been a member of the great Law Committee of this House that committee to which is referred so many questions pertaining to the amendment of statutes. Incidentally we have to listen to complaints of abuses of many of the federal statutes.

I believe it was never the intention of the founders of the Government to have a permanent bankruptcy system. The power was left in Congress to enact a bankruptcy law is in order. The House will be in order.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this does not disturb me in the least. Those who desire to hear what I have to say can hear me, I think.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am very much obliged to the Chair for his desire to hear me, and I am sure I will enlighten him on this occasion as well as our friend the parliamentary clerk, Mr. Hinds, does so frequently. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's instruction will be profitable.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope that I may not only get the cooperation of all on the floor for the repeal of what I believe to be this bad law; but I hope that after we shall all have voted to repeal it, the Speaker will instruct the Clerk to call his name, and he will vote likewise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to say in the brief time that is subject to my disposal, for I have already allotted most of the hour accorded to me, that it never was the purpose of the framers of the Constitution to have a permanent bankruptcy system. I want to say further that it never has been the policy of this Government to have a permanent bankruptcy system. There never was a bankruptcy law passed in any emergency that did not serve its day of usefulness and become the subject of great abuse, so that it had in the end to be repealed.

Now, this law, following the history of all other laws of a like kind, is abused. We were told when it was originally enacted that the abuses complained of under the old bankruptcy law would all be prevented in this, but abuses have multiplied. We have amended it from time to time, and yet complaint is made of more and more abuses. So the minority members of the committee have agreed that the best thing to do with this bad law, against which so many complaints are so justly lodged, is to repeal that law; and should the country come to the condition that led to the enactment of this law, a great financial panic, crisis, or stringency, then Congress can do as it has done heretofore, pass a law to meet the necessities of that sort of

But, Mr. Speaker, after about seven years of frenzy, I hope that the next four years will give us an era of prosperity and peace and of observance of law, and that we will not have any need for any bankruptcy legislation. [Applause.]

I now yield ten minutes or more, as he may desire, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, there probably never was a time and probably never will be a time in the history of legislative bodies when those having special interests will not press for their advancement, and will not put out the best side to secure what they desire. There probably never was a time, to secure what they desire. There probably never was a time, and there perhaps never will be a time, when the masses of the people can hope for presentation of their side except through the vigilance and zeal of those whom they from time to time choose to represent them. I think the truth of this is very fully illustrated in the question now before the House.

A bankruptcy law, as I understand-and I think it is a correct understanding of the matter-is, and always should be, designed primarily, if it be a proper and just law, for the relief of unfortunate debtors, and should never have for its primary object and purpose the perfecting of collecting machinery. Now, in the very nature of things, the debtor class can not have special representation in this Congress at this time or at any time, or in any legislative body whatever. those of us who have kept track of this matter especially, that for years and years the Congress, and the Judiciary Committees at both ends of this Capitol, were besieged and importuned by paid representatives of wholesalers and other organizations of creditors for the enactment of a bankruptcy law; that time after time, session after session, Congress after Congress, these appeals failed. Finally they were fruitful in the passage of the original bankruptcy act, which since has been amended and which it is now sought further to amend.

It was then declared that the original bankruptcy act was drafted and designed to serve the purposes of creditors and not to afford relief to debtors. The law then was stringent and searching for the creditor, and harsh and unmerciful toward the debtor, with little care for his rights and needs.

Amendments almost without exception, from that time to this, have been urged in favor of the creditor class so as to increase the power of the creditor over the debtor, to lessen the rights and narrow the avenues of escape for the unfortunate debtor.

The present attempt-and I do not mean any reflection upon any gentleman who takes the opposite view, as it is merely a matter of opinion—is in the direction of further strengthening the grip of the creditor class and of further lessening the prospect for the relief of the debtor class. If Congress is to continue legislating along this line, the real question always must be, What further can be done to give the creditor an advantage, or a fuller advantage, than he already has, and what further it is possible to do to close tighter and more securely the avenues for the escape of the unfortunate debtor?

Now, then, in view of this course, persisted in for years-this course taken, as I have suggested, at the instance and through the efforts of paid lobbyists and organizations of credit menquestion very opportunely comes before the House as to whether we shall legislate further in this direction in the interest of the creditor class and to the prejudice of the debtor class, or shall now, once for all, this bankrupt law having served every good purpose which it could serve, repeal it; and if in the future, some time, there be occasion for the enactment of another bankruptcy law, we may expect those charged with the duty now resting upon us to enact that law.

You can read this law as it stands, as it was made originally and as "perfected," as they call it, by amendment, from end to end, under any light you please to cast upon it, and you will find nothing in it but evidence of the handiwork of the powerful creditor class, and further evidence of the sorry plight in which more and more it places the debtor class.

Now, this creditor class has its representatives eager and active. The masses can not thus be heard. Men broken in for-tune, spirits, and hope can not combine with others in the same condition to impress upon Congress their view of their interests and rights.

I believe, and firmly believe, that everything of good that could be accomplished by this law has long since been accomplished; that its remaining on the statute book in its present form, or as its defenders would have it, is no longer necessary or desirable.

Of course, everybody interested in the bankrupt court, whether as officer, practitioner, or swallower of the estates of the bankrupts, will naturally favor the amendment instead of the repeal of the law upon which he fattens.

I believe that the appeal to this House made in this substitute for the repeal of this law is as righteous a one as ever was made to the representatives of the American people. What the response will be, of course, I know not, but let us vote upon the side of mercy once, with reference to this bankruptcy law. Let us turn once, so far as this bankruptcy law is concerned, from the side of Shylock and do something for Shylock's suffering I trust that the law may be repealed. I appeal to the sense of right and justice, the sense of manliness, of my fellow-Representatives, in the hope that the majority of them may see this matter as we who are advocating repeal see it, that there may go out from this House when the vote is taken the glad intelligence to thousands and thousands of people, voiceless except as we raise a voice for them, that the power of this grinding bankruptcy trust, so far as the House of Representatives is concerned, is doomed to fall, and fall at once. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes, or so much thereof as he may desire, to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis].

Mr. Landis. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]. During the last few years my attention has been called time and again by gentlemen in the congressional district I have the honor to represent to the abuses of this law, and without a single exception they favor its repeal in so far as my observation has gone. There is no city in that district of more than 15,000 population. There are a number of small wholesale houses, and without exception these wholesale establishments have suffered, and I feel convinced that the law has become the refuge of unprincipled men, who take advantage of it in order to fleece those who give them credit; and for the enlightenment of the House, and representing the sentiment of that district, I desire to submit a letter written by Mr. R. P. Shanklin, at the head of one of the largest wholesale grocery establishments in my district. I send it to the desk, and ask that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

R. P. SHANKLIN & COMPANY, Frankfort, Ind., October 21, 1908.

Hon. CHARLES B. LANDIS, Delphi, Ind.

Delphi, Ind.

Dear Sir: We want you to "bust" the bankruptcy law. It has outlived its usefulness. Let it die, and the sooner the better.

We do not deny that there was a time in our history when the country needed just such a measure, but that time is not now. It has gone. As conditions now are, the law works more confusion and demoralization than it does good.

It puts a premium on recklessness and careless methods. Many a man has never made a success in business and in life, simply because he knew beforehand that he could get relief from his financial obligations through the bankruptcy court. If they knew it was "root pig or die," there would be fewer people needing this court's assistance.

Further, it puts a prize on perjured knavery. Unscrupulous and scheming men are the most frequent to take advantage of its benefits. By its help many a rogue has "broke full-handed," and gone unpunished. There is hardly a large city in the United States, we dare say, which has not one, or two, or half a dozen men, who have gone through bankruptcy and immediately started up in business so extensive as to give "the lie" to every oath they swore before the court. Why, If a man will perjure himself (and everybody who knows much about men knows that some men will perjure themselves for money), he can set up in business for a few months, get a line of credit, stretch it for all it is worth, go through bankruptcy, and then move to a new community and do the same thing. Then he may repeat it ad infinitum, if he lives that long.

There is hardly a jobber in the Central West who will stand for this and do the same thing. Then he may repeat it an infinitum, it he lives that long.

There is hardly a jobber in the Central West who will stand for this law. As it now is, it works against them in favor of the large eastern houses, but it does not do even them enough good for them to clamor for its being retained. If it was abolished, every house would suffer for its own lack of careful judgment, and instead of much haphazard giving of credit to every "Tom, Dick, and Harry," they would see that every mother's son who got credit was worthy of it. This would have an influence toward making every man, young and old, endeavor to make his credit, worth something.

redit worth something.

Yes, the bankrutpcy law should be either repealed or modified enough to do away with some of the knavery connected with its administration. "Bust" it, and you will have our continued support.

Yours, very sincerely,

P. P. Shanklay & Co.

R. P. SHANKLIN & CO.

Mr. LANDIS. That letter represents my position on this

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], who I believe has charge of the time, or Mr. TIBRELL

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] has charge of the time.

Then I ask that he consume some of his Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, the object of a bankruptcy law has been well known from the time of its first enactment in England more than three hundred and fifty years ago. At that time, and in fact down until modern times, the object was to secure two things; first, the equitable and just distribution of a bankrupt's property, and, secondly, to administer under the courts the disposition of that property in the most economic and proper way. It was not conceived until modern times, about the opening of the last century, that the bankruptcy law should also incorporate in its provisions that the bankrupt himself should receive a discharge so that he might start again in life. Therefore, bearing this in mind, the law resolves itself into three parts. The first, and the principal thing, judged by its history, is to secure an equitable and just distribution of the assets of a debtor among his creditors and to do that in the most economic and proper manner. It, however, appeared in the evolution of this law, after a long period had elapsed and after great experience in the adjustment of estates, that an important consideration, and, indeed, now we may say the most important consideration, was also the discharge of the debtor. It will not, I think, be contended by anyone that the primary object of a bankruptcy law is not secured in accomplishing equitable distribution of the property that the bankrupt may have. That commends itself to the fair consideration of every Member of this

I assume, without fear of contradiction, that there is no one upon this floor who would assert it was right and just for a debtor to single out his relatives or his neighbors and to prefer them and to distribute his property among them, leaving his creditors out in the cold. That is an inequitable distribution of property; and it is to prevent that inequitable distribution and to allow all creditors the same consideration, and to do that in the cheapest and best manner, that our present bankruptcy law was enacted.

Now, every civilized, and, indeed, I may say semicivilized, nation in the world-has a bankrupt law of some kind to-day. England has enacted 39 bankruptcy laws, and 6 of those since 1835, and has not been without one since the reign of Henry VIII. France has had one for several centuries. Italy, when the republican States were formed centuries ago in Genoa, in 1498 placed a bankruptcy law upon her statutes, and that law has been continued in the Italian States since. Holland enacted a bankrupt law about that time. Germany, after the consolidation of the Empire in 1880, found that it was impossible to conduct her great manufacturing, commercial, and mercantile interests among the several States that composed the German Empire, States similarly situated in many respects to the States of our own country, without such a law. Nations, indeed, differ greatly from each other. Racial char-teristics vary. The customs of one nation are dissimilar to acteristics vary. others. Climatic conditions lead in results to different details, but the principle sought to be attained ends in the recognition of the necessity as incident to trade of the regulation by law of insolvent estates. It is said that in 1880 there was no civilized nation on the face of the globe that did not have a bankrupt law except the United States of America. If you go down the scale of countries less and less civilized, you will find that less and less are laws adopted for the equitable distribution of the assets of a debtor, the economical administration of his estate, and the securing of the bankrupt's discharge; so that when you reach a semicivilized nation like China, that has no bankrupt law, chaos in the adjustment of debts ensues, as China illustrates, where if a debtor owes debts to the amount of $5,000 he is liable to be beheaded. Now, in our own country we have had three bankrupt laws. In 1800 there was one enacted of a limited character. It served its purpose and has been annulled. In 1841 another bankrupt law was passed by the Congress of the United States, which was a political measure, and as a political measure it was soon wiped out. In 1867 another was enacted which was admirable in its features and which satisfied the country except in one or two matters of great importance-one the delay in its enforcement and the other the expense attendant thereto.

In these respects it proved a hardship on the debtor and the law was repealed. Immediately after its repeal there arose a great demand throughout the country that there should be another law enacted which should eliminate those features which the law of 1867 had shown to be oppressive to the debtor, and such a law was formulated into the law now upon our statute books, the law of 1898. As to that law I desire to read what a distinguished Senator from Kentucky remarked about it at the time of its enactment. Senator Lindsay said:

This measure is the most thoroughly analyzed piece of proposed legislation I have ever examined. Every conceivable contingency seems to have been thought out and carefully provided for. It is my judgment, that if enacted, it will be a conspicuous example of matured legislation, and remain for all time as an example of how laws should be prepared before being placed upon the statute books.

It is true that that encomium has not been entirely justified, from the fact that amendments, by the testing of the law, have been found to be desirable from time to time, but the same is true of most laws that are placed upon the statute books, or else we should not be assembled here. If our laws were perfect, free from every error, there would be no occasion for legislation at all. We are gathered here for the purpose of changing and perfecting laws, as in the evolution of business the commercial interests of the country demand, and because in the actual test of laws many disclose defects or suggest improvements that should be made. There is very much that I would like to say on the general line upon this subject, but I am going, as far as possible, to limit myself to a few matters, as other gentlemen desire, and I believe a large number, to say something on this subject. Certainly it would be ungracious for me to use up the hour at my command.

I desire to call attention to objections to the law itself. I did not hear many. I heard a declamation against the law from the gentleman who preceded me, but not any specific objection, not any fatal defect in the existing law. I listened in vain for any except from the gentleman from Missouri, who last addressed us, who said it was oppressive to the poor; that the poor debtor had no show under it, and therefore the law should be obliterated. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a law devised to help the honest poor man out of his financial difficulties, it is the law on our books to-day. I do not think the gentleman who made that assertion thought when he made it what the law was—the present bankrupt law.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman to ask a question?

Mr. TIRRELL. You may; yes. Mr. CLAYTON. Is not this bill a confession that your bankruptcy bill is defective, and does not your report show abuses of that law? Does not your bill and report itself sustain the argument made by those who favor the repeal of the whole law?

Mr. TIRRELL. I thought the gentleman from Alabama was going to ask me a question in regard to what I was speaking about at the time. I will take up that matter later on. I was saying was that there was an argument made on the other side that the present law was oppressive to the poor debtor. Why, there never was a bankrupt law where the benefit to the honest poor debtor was equal to the one on the statute books to-day. It is not necessary for a man who is poor to deposit any money, to pay one cent into the court, in order to have his bankruptcy passed upon or to receive his discharge. If he has no money, he makes an affidavit to that effect and the court, if satisfied with the truthfulness of the affidavit, takes his case, and that case is put through without his paying anything, either as court fees or expenses connected therewith.

Therefore you can not conceive of a case in litigation under state insolvency laws where, like the present law, an honest, poor debtor can go to the court without paying even an entrance fee and have his case taken care of and receive his discharge.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes, sir. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Has the gentleman given the question investigation as to what is the proportion of the debts collected in the bankruptcy courts since the existence of the present bankruptcy law, as compared with what per cent was collected in state courts prior to the enactment of this law?

Mr. TIRRELL. That would be impossible to ascertain. There are no statistics upon that subject, but I want to say this, that when a man goes into bankruptcy he is usually at the end of his resources. He has collected the debts that are immediately, at least, convertible into cash. He is at the end of his rope. He has cleaned up his assets as far as he can, and, of course, in every bankruptcy case there would not be as many cases for collection, but very few cases for collection, in court as there would be in the case of one carrying on a business and who is bringing suit, off and on, in connection with that business from day to day.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. TIRRELL.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is it not a fact that the expenses in the United States courts attending the collection by the creditor of his debts out of the bankrupt estate cost the creditor immensely more than the collection in a state court?

Mr. TIRRELL. On the contrary, it is just the other way. It costs the creditor nothing in the bankruptcy court—that is, comparatively nothing—to collect his debts, whereas out of the bankruptcy court every suit must be brought and all the court costs which prevail in most States are added on to swell the amount. I venture to assert from a practical law experience under the bankruptcy law, from 1867 down to the present one, that the expense paid is much more to the creditor, as far as paying out money is concerned.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does not the gentleman know that the report of the Attorney-General contains an itemized statement of these expenses and fees, and in many cases they go as high as 10, 15, and 20 per cent of the assets realized?

Mr. TIRRELL. That may be a general statement, but I want to see the report of the Attorney-General himself and find out by analysis of those expenses where they belong. I have had many cases under the bankrupt law, and I do not know where It costs the poor debtor nothing, as I have the cost comes in. already stated, and all the costs are so limited and supervised by the district court judge that nothing improper can be expended. The fees are so extraordinarily low now that are given the trustees in bankruptcy cases that it is almost impossible to induce lawyers in my section, or business men in my section, to take the trusteeship of these estates and lose a great deal of time in getting anything out of them. The truth of the matter is that under the present law expenses are reduced to a minimum. There is no distribution of property ever made under any law that in economy is equal to the one now upon our statute books. There can be no extravagant fees whatever in connection with the administration of a bankrupt's estate.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is it not true that when this law was under consideration the argument chiefly used in favor of its passage was that there ought to be a bankruptcy law every twenty to twenty-five years in order to give unfortunate men an opportunity to start anew, and that it was never intended that this bankruptcy law should remain a permanent law?

Mr. TIRRELL. I differ from the gentleman there.
Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is it not true that that was the chief argument used at the time in favor of the passage of this

Mr. TIRRELL. All kinds of argument are used for the passage of laws. The gentleman has used many ingenious and original ones since he has been a Member of Congress

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. It never was intended that this law should remain a permanent law, as an avenue of escape for a man who wanted to keep from paying his honest debts.

Mr. TIRRELL. I will take up the point the gentleman has The gentleman asks if the bankruptcy law was not intended to apply, when there were a large number of men in distress on account of financial embarrassment, to relieve them, but it was not designed for normal conditions. Now, then, if it was a good thing when there were 10,000 men in financial embarrassment to have a bankrupt law to relieve them, is it not a pretty good thing at the present time when, we will say, there are one-third of that number, to relieve them? Do not the one-third need the efficiency of that law to relieve them as well as the three-thirds, under the supposition of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The point that I made was that it was contended that it was to be a temporary law, but here you are fighting for a permanent law.

TIRRELL. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States which gives Congress exclusive jurdisdiction in bankruptcy that indicates anything of the kind.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me?
Mr. TIRRELL. I can not be further interrupted.

Mr. CLAYTON. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that the proposition to limit the law to a certain term of years, the present bankruptcy law, failed by a vote of 3? That is my recollection.

Mr. TIRRELL. That may be so, for there will be—
Mr. CLAYTON (continuing). The object being to make it merely a temporary law.

Mr. TIRRELL. That may have been the thought of some when the question was debated, but I find no evidence it was so intended by the framers of the Constitution. It was agreed that inasmuch as commerce should be free and interchangeable between the States it was absolutely necessary that Congress should have jurisdiction of all bankruptcy matters. There is no intimation in the Constitution itself or in the discussion when that part of the Constitution was framed, that I know of, that its temporary existence was intended by the fathers.

The objections to this bill and a bankrupt law are probably more succinctly stated in the views of the minority of the Judiciary Committee than they will be in this debate. tion, therefore, to their report filed with this bill and to their objections, except as they have been previously referred to. is claimed that the proposed changes emanate from the creditor class; that there are no organizations of insolvent debtors or small retail men who through organizations might make their objections known to Congress.

It is not claimed, however, that there are not innumerable associations of poor men, of laboring men, of retailers, of artisans, and mechanics in all sections of the country. produce from them evidence that there is among them any opposed to bankrupt laws, or has one of these associations ever passed a resolution against them? None are quicker to discover discriminations or bolder in demanding their rights. this law had operated against them in any way and had not relieved them against disaster and even oppression, we should long ago and repeatedly heard them knock on legislative doors. Again they say, this law is a favorite method by which fraud may be perpetrated. The exact converse of this, I maintain, is true. Without it 48 ununiform and often crude statutes take its place, by which preferences are fostered and fraud is shielded, because no procedure is provided for the creditors to prevent the one or reach the other.

They claim that the primary object of the bankruptcy law is to relieve unfortunate debtors, and at the same time assert that it provides harsher and more effective collection laws. They say it was enacted for beneficent purposes, but has been converted into a means of oppressing.

They assert it is inimical to the debtor class, but fail to point out, as to any one of these assertions, wherein the law is defective or brings about any such conditions. Asseveration is not proof. Declamation is not argument. The people of this country, the merchants, manufacturers, and traders, as well as the honest wage-earner, want a square deal throughout the States—the one to an equitable distribution of a debtor's assets without local preferences or successful concealment of property, and the other to a speedy discharge, easy and inexpensive to obtain, if he has been honest, that he may again add his labor, time, and ability to the industrial world. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, important as this question is, it will be impossible to-day, under the rule, to debate the question and to have it well understood. I do not agree in general with the remarks made pro and con on this proposition to repeal the bankruptcy law. There seems to be a misconception somewhere in relation to the law. The original idea with the framers of the Constitution of the United States was not to establish a system of collection, particularly. That was an incident only. The fourth clause of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States merely grants as one of the powers of Congress the right to "establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," not to establish a method of making collections. That was not the idea at all.

But it was to prevent in the different States different forms of bankruptcy proceedings; and it was denied in the debates on the adoption of the Constitution of the United States that it was intended to affect the matter of insolvency laws in the different States. And it took about seventy-five years for the Supreme Court and other federal courts to reach the definite conclusion that in some way or other the bankruptcy law of the United States operated not to set aside the state insolvency laws, but simply to suspend them while there was an effort being made to enforce the bankruptcy law of the United States.

England has been struggling with this question through many centuries. I differ with my friend as to the date in which she commenced. She began in the thirteenth century, and they legislated up and down trying to ameliorate the very severe collection laws that allowed the creditor to put his debtor in prison. Where the debt was less than a pound, creditors not only seized the property of the debtors for its payment, but their persons, and put them in prison. William Shakespeare in his persons, and put them in prison. While the control of time is said in his history to have done this. It was through the operation of barbarous English collection laws that we got Principle Progress, written in an English jail. The effort was to get a bankruptcy system to afford relief from these severe provisions of the English laws, some of which we had over here in the colonies and the earlier States. In England a bankruptcy law was the result of a long struggle first to secure a measure of relief to unfortunate debtors.

It was not until 1542 that a bankruptcy system anything like satisfactory was enacted by the English Parliament, but it was not until August 1, 1849, that it adopted a comprehensive statute on the subject. The former act was in the time of Henry VIII.

The act of 1542 was directed in part against debtors, especially a class known as "illicit traders," described in the act thus:

Who, craftly obtaining in their hands great substance of other men's goods, do suddenly flee to parts unknown * * * against all reason, equity, and good conscience.

It was criminal in nature as to such traders, but it, like all others, looked to an equitable division of the debtor's property among all his creditors. It was not until in Queen Anne's reign that the bankrupt law of England was amended, taking away its criminal nature, and the bankrupt became entitled to a discharge, with the consent of a majority of his creditors.

Even of this bankrupt law, Lord Loughborough remarked that-

The law, upon an act of bankruptcy being committed, vest his property upon a just consideration; not as a forfeiture; not on a supposition of a crime committed; not as a penalty.

And Chief Justice Shaw, of Massachusetts, in describing the English system, says it is English system, says it is—

An adversary proceeding against a defaulting trader upon doing certain acts indicative of present or impending insolvency. These (bankrupt) laws provide, generally, that upon a trader's doing certain acts considered acts of bankruptcy, a creditor may apply for and obtain a commission (out of chancery), under which the whole of a trader's property is sequestered and taken into the custody of the law * * * the proceeds of which * * * are appropriated to the payment of all the bankrupt's debts, if sufficient therefor; otherwise to pay them in equal proportions. * * * The same law further provides that, if the bankrupt will honestly and faithfully cooperate in the proceeding; if he will disclose all his property and effects, and aid the officers appointed for that purpose by information and by all means in his power, and do all the duties required of him in the premises, he shall be absolved and discharged of all debts and receive a certificate as the authoritative evidence of his right to such discharge.

But for this bankrupter act providing for a beekving a bankrupt will be absolved.

But for this bankruptcy act providing for absolving a bankrupt from all debts upon the conditions named, the framers of our Constitution would not have authorized Congress to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy in the United States.

When our Constitution was adopted (1789), the idea was that we were not giving to Congress the power to make a bankruptcy law, and some of the courts afterwards held that the only bankruptcy law that would be constitutional under our Constitution was the bankruptcy law of England in force at the time the Constitution was adopted. But that has been overridden by the courts finally, and though it took a long time to get over all these things, we have gotten rid of the oppressive portions of the old bankruptcy laws, and we have done a great many things; so that instead of the bankruptcy law of the United States being now an oppressive one upon the debtors, it is one that gives them effective relief. My friend from Missouri [Mr. De Armond] cries out to have us vote to repeal the present law, because he says it would be a mercy to the poor and the debtor.

It would be turning over the debtor to the fierce operation of the state insolvency and collection laws, such as exist in many of the States of this Union, and offer him nothing in return in the way of a discharge in bankruptcy. I believe my friend from Indiana [Mr. Landis] says there are cases where men get a discharge and start in business again. Well, that is the very object and the benign effect of a bankruptcy law. He says dishonest men get the benefit of it. That may be so sometimes, but I have no idea that 5 per cent of the men who get the benefit of the law are dishonest, which leaves 95 per cent of honest men to start again in life and have a chance to start free from executions in the hands of sheriffs and constables.

And it ought to be borne in mind by Members that a dis-

And it ought to be borne in mind by Meinser's that a dis-honest debtor can not, if the law is properly administered, get a discharge under the bankruptcy law of 1898. We have had our troubles. The first bankruptcy law was passed April 4, 1800. It had a limitation of five years upon its existence, but on account of peculiarities that soon arose and the great complaint that came up from States in the Union that were enforcing barbaric execution laws against debtors, they repealed that law December 19, 1803, in less than four years. It was the people who wanted to enforce those barbarous collection laws, which we inherited from mother England, and who sent some of the better men of the country to prison because they were not prosperous and kept them for years or within prison bounds, that secured this early repeal. The great Simon Kenton, the noted Indian fighter of Kentucky and later of Ohio, was in prison or kept within prison bounds for months, if not years of his life, under a law of the kind that they wanted to enforce instead of the bankruptcy law of 1800. Robert Morris, the greatest of our Revolutionary patriots, who financed and, out of his own resources and by his own credit, maintained the army under Washington in the field, especially in the Yorktown campaign, later went to prison for debt, and neither he nor his estate have ever been reimbursed.

We waited forty-one years, to August 19, 1841, to get another bankruptcy law, and the same cry was again raised against that, and it had an existence of only about two years. It was repealed March 3, 1843. We waited until 1867, and then we got a more perfect and benign bankruptcy law that did a great deal of good in this country. It lasted eleven years, and was repealed September 1, 1878. Congress passed another July 1, 1898, with many improved provisions in it, corresponding largely to the 1849 permanent bankruptcy law of the Kingdom of to the 1849 permanent bankruptcy law of the Kingdom of Great Britain. That is the law that we should address ourselves to, to amend and cure its defects, and perfect it for the benefit of the honest man who is unfortunate in his business transactions. [Applause.]

Mr. TIRRELL. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] if he will use a portion of his time?

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Reid].

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk and desire to have read as a part of my remarks a letter from the National Retail Grocers' Association.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETAIL GROCERS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Cleveland, Ohio, February 5, 1909.

Hon. CHARLES C. REID.

Dean Sir: In justice to the retail merchants of the United States, we sincerely ask you to either give the retail merchants an opportunity to be heard on the Sherley bill to amend the bankruptcy act (H. R. 21929) before voting on it or cast your vote against it. A bill that is so unjust to the retailer, a man who stands between thousands of people and starvation other than as credit is extended to them by him, should not be legislated against in the manner the Sherley bill intends. The bankruptcy act has outlived its usefulness and should be repealed. I beg of you in all spirit of fairness to heed our petition.

Yours, truly,

JOHN A. GREEN. Secretary.

JOHN A. GREEN, Secretary.

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, it will be noticed that the letter which the Clerk has just read emanates from a class of men whose complaints or protests are seldom heard in the halls of this assembly. We hear much from those who persist in maintaining a permanent system of bankruptcy. They are those who are so situated that they may organize into large and powerful associations and be heard through their Representatives before the various committees of this House. The ordinary men, engaged in the common pursuits of life, who do not anticipate bankruptcy to-morrow, are not given to organizing into bodies and sending here petitions for the repeal of statutes that may only possibly operate against them in the future. The poor man, the ordinary man in business, has no occasion to understand the iniquity of the system until he falls a victim to it. This communication which has been read is from the National Retail Grocers' Association. The wholesalers, the Credit Men's Association, and that organization which I understand has recently sprung into existence known as the "National Association of Referees in Bankruptcy," are untiring in their efforts to continue the law "for the good of the glorious cause." this class of individuals who have always extended the operation of these statutes, until they became so harsh and oppressive upon the debtor classes, upon the smaller business men, upon the people generally, that their Representatives here were forced to repeal them. I can not understand how gentlemen can find consolation in rehearsing here the story of the various enact-ments of these laws during the history of this country. It seems to me to be no argument in behalf of the present system that similar laws have been several times enacted and as many times repealed. The first bankruptcy law, as was suggested by one of the gentlemen, was limited in its duration. In my humble judgment any law of the kind ought to be limited, and under no circumstances made permanent in this country. first bankruptcy law was by its terms limited to five years, but was repealed in less than two.

Another, the law of 1841, was met by such a storm of protest that it was repealed by the very Congress that enacted it. Another met a similar fate when its operation became thoroughly extended throughout the country. This has been the history of this character of legislation all along. The fact that the framers of the Constitution reposed the power in Congress to enact such statutes does not in itself determine the wisdom of exercising the power. It is not unlike many other powers conferred upon the Federal Government, some of which have never been used at all, some have been used with extreme caution, and others only when time and occasion required.

In my judgment, the power to enact bankruptcy laws is one that should be exercised with wise discretion and promptly repealed when the emergency is passed. There are times in the history of every country when, in spite of the wisest statesmanship or the most frugal and economical management of business institutions, financial storms will arise, sweep throughout the length and breadth of the land for a season, and the just and the unjust, the industrious and the slothful, the honest and dishonest are alike left prostrate and helpless in its Then it is that the good of society requires that some means be afforded the honest and unfortunate man by which he may surrender to his creditors what remains of his shat-tered fortunes and liberate himself from the hopelessness and despondency of financial distress. When this has been accomplished all has been done that comes properly within the purpose of bankruptcy legislation. Every attempt to extend it further has resulted in its becoming an agency for the accomplishment of purposes entirely foreign to the object of its origin. It is no longer a measure for the equitable distribution of the assets of bankrupts, but becomes at once an oppressive and expensive procedure for the collection of debts. The voluntary feature opens the doors to fraud and the involuntary to oppression and coercion. Gentlemen cry out as though the repeal of this law would deprive somebody of vested rights or uproot and overthrow some ancient and beneficent principle. the enactment of the present law, through more than a hundred years of our history, three different bankruptcy acts afforded an aggregate duration of only fourteen years. During that century, with the exception of these fourteen years, the insolvency of the States were found amply sufficient to admit of the establishment of the commercial integrity and greatness of this

Any attempt to model a system of bankruptcy laws in this country similar to that which obtains in England will always be met with failure. Gentlemen have stated the fact that in Italy, France, and England they have had various bankrupt laws. England's experience, even with the facilities at her command for the administration of such a law, has been by no means satisfactory. Since the days of Henry VIII one statute after another has been enacted, amended repeatedly, and finally repealed. Writers upon the English law and practice in bankruptcy state that the law there was so objectionable that a new law was found necessary, and after various unsuccessful attempts the law of 1883 was passed. The various acts upon the subject had been amended and consolidated by Parliament in 1825. In 1831 a bankruptcy court was established depriving the chancery court of jurisdiction, and official assignees were created. In 1841 other changes were made in the law and the powers of commissioners enlarged. In 1847, along with other changes, jurisdiction was restored to the courts of chancery. In 1849 the bankruptcy consolidation act was passed, providing for further important changes and another enlargement of the powers of commissioners, and a new system for the collection of fees. Mr. Buchanan of Virginia, some years ago a Member of this House, filed a report upon the subject, in which he reviewed the history of the English legislation and from which I derive most of the data upon the subject, quoted an English writer, Mr. Robinson, who said that the act of 1849 was hailed with much satisfaction. It was expected that it would create a high standard of commercial morality, reduce fraud and dis-honesty on the part of bankrupts, and lessen delays and expenses which had theretofore prevailed. Whether the results warranted the expectations may be imagined when we learn that in 1861 further and far-reaching changes were again made; among them the court for the relief of insolvent debtors was abolished and its jurisdiction transferred to the bankruptcy court. Dissatisfaction continued to prevail, and in 1868 the bankruptcy amendment act was passed. In 1869 the whole subject was again revised and an entirely new law in many respects took the place of the old. This also became the subject of extravagance and abuse, and sharing the fate of all previous enactments, was swept away by the act of 1883.

The fraud, extravagance, waste, and abuse that always attended the administration of these laws occasioned a learned chancellor to express the opinion that they had degenerated into little more than the stock in trade for the commission, assignees, and solicitors

We are hearing protests of a similar character from all over the land to-day. Men who are interested in the emoluments which the procedure affords, men who get the fees, men who hold the positions created by the law, and those who make use of it as a debt-collecting agency, are the ones interested in perpetuating it. All the influences brought to bear to perpetuate and amend this law from time to time spring from these classes only. They come here and tell us they are not interested in this law for selfish purposes of their own, but solely in the interest of the debtor, whose obligation they hold and are seeking to enforce.

No man can deny that the present like all other bankruptcy statutes found its origin in the desire to relieve the widespread distress that followed financial depression. It was an answer to the cry of the unfortunate and helpless. It never would have been the law had conditions been normal, as they are It was not passed for the purpose of enlarging the facilities for the collection of debt or because state tribunals were lacking in either power or disposition to afford adequate remedies. These arguments would never have induced its enactment. The conditions that called it into existence are gone. The distressed have met relief. Those who were crushed beneath the weight of those troublous times are again laying hold upon the cables of hope and opportunity. They ask nothing of Congress but to be let alone. This class, for whose benefit this law was really enacted, ask nothing further at our hands. Busied with the problems of the future which have again been opened up to them, they are altogether unconscious of the tender solicitude for their present welfare, which is manifest in the earnestness and activity by which credit associations and court officials defend the law and insist upon its further amendment and extension.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in hearing from both sides of this question. I would like to know if the "Debtor Men's Association" find this law a wise provision for permanent legislation. We have seen that every bankruptcy law that has lived beyond the conditions which justified its enactment has become the instrumentality of fraud and oppression. The greatest statesmen of both this country and England have wrestled with the question for generations. The conditions in England are far more favorable to the establishment of a permanent system there than our form of government will admit of, and yet failure has been stamped upon all her enactments heretofore, and success and satisfaction upon none. There is something inherently wrong with the proposition as a permanent measure. No law upon the subject has ever risen above the wisdom of the ancient Hebrew, whose customs provided for the cancellation of debts at long intervals upon the return of the Year of Jubilee. Sir, the constant demand for amendment, the cry of complaint fast coming up from all quarters, protests such as are embodied in the letter read by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis] and the one I have just had read at the Clerk's desk, convince me that we have yet by no means attained here in perfection what has always elsewhere been impossible. I, for one, choose rather to be guided and controlled by the deductions of experience than by the illusions of theory. Gentlemen argue that we should have a law for the collection of debt which operates uniformly throughout the country. I deny that this comes within the proper purview of a bankruptcy law. If it did, this contention also gives way before the experience of the past.

One test of the efficiency of the statute for this purpose is found in the answer to the question, What has been accomplished by it? If I recollect the statistics correctly, under the plished by it? If I recollect the statistics correctly, under the old bankruptcy statutes only 11 per cent of their debts was realized by creditors, after deducting the expenses of administration. Under the insolvency laws of the State 33½ per cent was collected. I am informed, and I think reliably, that a much less per cent is realized to-day under the operation of the present system. I do not know that that is correct, but I have no doubt that if statistics were properly compiled, and the truth were known, this would be found to be the case. The law when permitted to stand for long periods, has always belaw, when permitted to stand for long periods, has always become obnoxious to both debtor and creditor.

The voluntary feature has always developed into an agency for fraud and the involuntary feature into an agent for op-This has been the history of the statute without an

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. REID. I will. Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If the gentleman has the information, will he please advise the House how long the various bankruptcy laws enacted since the civil war have remained on the staute books? The gentleman mentioned a bankruptcy law enacted prior to the civil war.

Mr. REID. Aside from the present law, there has been only one since the civil war; that was the act of 1867, in existence for eleven years.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Was not there an act passed in 1867?

Mr. REID. Yes. That was repealed in 1878. The first act was passed in 1800 and repealed after three years. It was limited to five years, but was repealed in three. In 1841 there was also an act passed, and that was repealed by the same Congress that passed it. The act of 1867 was repealed in 1878, and our last act ought to be repealed now.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. So there have been but two bankruptcy acts since the civil war, the act of 1867 and the

Mr. REID. Yes; and the act of 1898 has existed longer than any prior law. The House passed a bill to repeal the act of 1867 once or twice before the Senate concurred and it was finally repealed. President Grant sent a vigorous message to Congress on the subject, calling attention to the fraud and perjury and abuse and waste that was attendant upon the administration of this law and strongly urged its repeal.

Now, as I stated a moment ago, England is almost exclusively a commercial country. Her territory is small and her population is dense. We have a far greater geographical area and a great diversity of resources. What may be just for one locality operates unjustly in another.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am anxious that other gentlemen should occupy some of the time in this discussion. At the request of some of my colleagues on the committee, I prepared the views of the minority, and I ask unanimous consent that I may print that document as a part of my remarks. I now yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to print the minority views as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

The minority views are as follows:

We think the time has come when the entire bankruptcy law should be repealed, and thereby obviate the necessity for continuous amend-ment, ment.

In our opinion, the difficulties with a permanent bankruptcy system are inherent, and the efforts to remedy such defects from time to time by amendments will remain futile, and serve only to postpone the date when the hopes of those who oppose every provision of the measure will be accomplished by its entire repeal.

One of the objections against the continued amending of the law is found in the fact that such amendments originate only with those whose interest it is to continue the system. Proposed changes in the law emanating from the creditor class, credit men's associations, and organizations of officials whose existence is derived from the law necessarily tend to develop in the end harsher provisions toward the unfortunate debtor and a gradual extension of the provisions of the law in the interests of one class only. We do not believe that even the improvement of a system fundamentally wrong will be attended with desirable results. There are no organizations of insolvent debtors or small retail men through which such classes may make known to Congress their objections to such legislation. These men and others in the various pursuits of life who do not contemplate becoming bankrupts, but who may tomorrow suffer from the harsh provisions of such a law, have no special representation here and no hired attorneys to present their of life who do not contemplate becoming bankrupts, but who may tomorrow suffer from the harsh provisions of such a law, have no special representation here and no hired attorneys to present their direct of all of these must be guarded, if guarded at all, by their representatives in Congress. There is no means of arriving at the sentiment of this very large class except as it may be gathered from the personal experiences and general observation of each representative.

Resolutions adopted by boards of trade and organizations of wholesalers, federal officials, and credit men can reliect only an one-sided and extended in the interests of one class until it became nothing more than a harsh and oppressive agency for the collection of debt. This prediction has been amply justified. The operation of the statute in the federal courts is necessarily cumbering the collection of debt. This prediction has been amply justified. The operation of the statute in the federal courts is necessarily cumbering the statute of the subject of the subject have been apply justified. The operation of the statute in the federal courts is necessarily cumbering the subject is unsatisfactory caustics. England, exercising the unilmited power of Parliament throughout the whole domain, has sought for generations to develop a satisfactory bankrupticy law. From the reign of Edward III one law after another was enacted.

We are not unaware that some writers upon the subject have combened as a subject have combened a courts whose existence depends upon the perpetuation of bankruptcy proceedings and who naturally become allied with the unreasonable and implacable creditor. Interest in perpetuating it becomes confined to one class only.

The small business men of the country are by far the more numerous, and must always remain so. Their encouragement and protection is highly necessary to the prosperity of the entire country. They are usually found in the small towns and villages, remote from the centers where the federal courts are established. The expense and inconvenience of defending against bankruptcy proceedings, aside from the legal cost and fees in such cases, becomes a powerful weapon in the hands of an uncompromising creditor, by which he may enforce his demands. We submit that the insolvency laws of the States are found to be more just and satisfactory under general conditions. They are made in keeping with the conditions that exist in each locality, and when no general disturbance imposes the same misfortune upon the whole country alike, these laws should prevail. No objection against their provisions or their administration can be found that will compare with that which is manifest against national acts in the fact that each heretofore has been many times amended and finally repealed.

Under the insolvency laws of the States creditors have collected a larger per cent of their debts than they did under the old bankruptcy laws, and we feel quite sure that if statistics were available the same situation would be found to exist at present. This is doubtless due to the fact that proceedings in the federal court are necessarily more cumbersome and expensive, attendant with more delays and prolixity, than that of courts nearer the residence of litigants and witnesses. If we calculate the percentage of a small estate that must necessarily regard the system even as a proceeding for the collections of debt as a failure. In our opinion there should be no exercise of federal power when there is not a clear necessity for it. C who derive emoluments from its operation. We can not bring ourselves to look upon "credit men's associations" and organizations of bankruptcy court officials as interested and actuated altogether for the "good of the glorious cause." We fear the development of a situation similar to that referred to by an English chancellor in speaking of the bankruptcy laws of England when he said: "They are little more than the stock in trade for the commissioners, the assignees, and the solicitors."

of the bankruptcy laws of England when he said: "They are little more than the stock in trade for the commissioners, the assignees, and the solicitors."

Those who are interested in converting the bankruptcy law more and more into mere collection machinery, and lawyers whose practice is confined largely to bankruptcy cases regard the bankruptcy law with favor, and their appreciation of the law increases as the law is made more and more severe and harsh against the debtor class. They forget that the primary object of the bankruptcy law is to relieve unfortunate debtors from the weighty oppression of debts impossible for them to pay. These advocates of drastic bankruptcy legislation care nothing for the debtor class. The paramount object of their desire is to obtain harsher and more effective federal collection laws, all resting for their constitutionality upon the power of Congress to pass a bankruptcy law. We are not willing to see this provision of the Constitution, written for beneficent purposes, converted into a means of oppression. We believe that many amendments proposed by the creditor class to the bankruptcy law are infinited to the debtor class, and naturally so. The creditor is apt to think that the debtor should not have any very liberal relief. Thisopposes the very fundamental theory of any bankruptcy law. Such a law rests for its justification upon the beneficence that it is supposed to afford unfortunate debtors. We are unwilling to subscribe to a theory that ignores this idea which lies at the foundation of all proper bankruptcy legislation.

The present bankruptcy act has stood longer than any prior act of the kind in the history of the country. As we have said, we do not believe there is any longer any necessity for its retention. One reason given for its enactment was that it was to relieve insolvent debtors from debts beyond their ability to pay and that were fastened upon them by the unusual stringency of the times. This law has served its day and purpose. It is now the subject of more abuse

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to occupy a part of his time.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House at present is whether we shall have a uniform bankruptcy law or 47 different statutes that will vary as the whims and onlying of the different statutes that will vary as the whims and opinion of the different state legislators decide what should be the provisions for insolvency legislation in their respective States. Most of us as practitioners have acquaintance with the old method that was in force prior to the establishment of the uniform bankruptcy law, and the only question here is whether we shall have a uniform system of bankruptcy legislation or one of contrariety of character. I have been a supporter and believer in state-rights legislation, but if there is ever a need of having uniform legislation it is in those matters that pertain to the business affairs of the country. It has been argued that because in prior times with bankruptcy measures those measures were repealed shortly after their enactment that that is reason to-day why we should follow that course at this time, but I wish to emphasize upon the attention of the Members the fact that the conditions as they exist to-day in the commercial world are entirely different from what existed thirty years ago. There are no boundary lines of States, so far as business affairs are concerned, and it can not be contended here that it is not better to have 1 uniform law than 47 different laws. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], almost with tears in their words, say this is a law against the interest of the debtor class; but let us for a minute examine the statistics, as shown by the report of the Attorney-General for the year 1908, in their respective States, as to how many have taken advantage of this bankruptcy law. Of 341 voluntary petitions that were filed in Alabama, 278 of them involved cases of less than $500, and 201 of those pertained to wage-earners exclusively. In Missouri 319 voluntary cases were filed, of which 249 involved less than $500, and of these 115 related exclusively to wage-earners. In the face of these statistics will it be contended that this law is not of value to the poor class, and where is there any demand-

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from Arkansas would care to have the figures read from his State, I would be pleased to give them.

Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. REID.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield for a short question.

Mr. REID. Has the gentleman any statistics at hand that will show how many debtors, small debtors, were crushed out of business by threats of involuntary bankruptcy?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have here in that connection the number of cases of involuntary bankruptcy, and that is the only method to force a man out of business, and in most instances of that character of cases the proceeding is with the approval of the bankrupt. In Alabama, as against the 341 voluntary instances, there were only 58 involuntary cases. In Missouri there were 319 voluntary and 103 involuntary cases. to show that the poor man as well as the retail merchant is provided for under this bankruptcy legislation. The very theory of the bankruptcy legislation is to provide protection to the unfortunate debtor, to provide him with court machinery whereby he may discharge all his obligations, so that they will not hang as a yoke upon him. It can not be argued at all that this law is in any sense in favor of the creditor class. Far from it, because it seeks to curtail and limit the expenditures of the trustees and referees and have the available property distributed equitably to all creditors under a uniform system. Many of us remember the practices that prevailed under the old state system, whereby banks, by reason of their position on renewing loans when the business man was hard pressed for credit, got the preferential advantage, or some other preferred and favored creditor, who took the assets under attachment proceedings on a judgment note, to the disadvantage of the creditors generally. But who will deny that under this bankruptcy law the creditors do not obtain a uniform distribution of the assets of the debtor? I do not wish to return to the method that was in vogue prior to the enforcement of this act, with its favoritisms and unfair practices. If there was ever an occasion where we should have uniform legislation, so as to protect the business man in this country, so as to protect the creditors and the debtor class, it is with this character of legislation that is pending at present before the House, and the question is, Shall we have uniform legislation or shall we have a contrariety of legislation, over which the business men of the country can not have any control by reason of the varying statutes in their respective States? I submit at this time, when the country is expanding in its commercial relations, when we are called on time and time again to invade the States in their privileges, that in this particular there is justification for our retaining jurisdiction and having uniform legislation, as that provided in this law and as embodied in the amendments that are to be acted upon later if this substitute is voted down. Let us meet the existing conditions by continuing and strengthening the bankruptcy law, that the business interests of the entire country will be accorded in all the States the same equity, without favor to any class and with justice to all.

Will the gentleman from Alabama use some Mr. TIRRELL. of his time now?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have twenty-seven minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-seven minutes remaining.

Mr. CLAYTON. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENBY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss the amendments proposed, but I shall address myself for the few moments allotted me to the proposition that the bankruptcy law as it exists should be repealed. It was my fortune to be a member of this body when the Henderson bill, which is the present bankruptcy act, was passed; and I remember distinctly the arguments pro and con made at that time. Mr. Speaker, you may search the history of the country and make investigation of the causes that brought about the enactment of bankruptcy measures in all countries, and you will find primarily they have been for the purpose of relieving dis-tressed debtors. When the delegates were assembled in the convention which made the Constitution of 1787, a research of the brief history there made on this subject will demonstrate the one purpose uppermost in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when they wrote the bankruptcy clause was that Congress should have power to deal with the question of Congress should have power to dear with the question of bankruptcies in order that debtors might be relieved of their burdens. Such was the purport of this clause of the Constitution. We have had three bankruptcy laws prior to the present one; one, which has been referred to, in 1800, which was passed by the Federalist party. It had a mandatory limitation of five years upon it, and was repealed in less than three years. The next law was passed in 1841 by the Whig party, and so odious was this measure it was repealed in thirteen The next act was in 1867, enacted by the Republican party, and its provisions were made so severe, cumbersome, and odious it was repealed after it had been upon the statute books for a little more than ten years. Mr. Speaker, in each one of these three laws to which reference has been made there was a provision providing for involuntary bankruptcy, and I maintained in the former discussion, as I do here, that if these involuntary features had not been in the statutes they would have remained upon our books much longer than they did.

What was the situation when we passed the law in 1898? I made a diligent search of the statistics as far as possible and ascertained that when we were about to pass that law there were more than 200,000 bankrupt debtors in this country who were entitled to relief at the hands of Congress, and no State could give that relief because it was not within the power of the State to pass such a general bankruptcy law. It was found their indebtedness amounted to millions of dollars, and the one thing appealing to the American Congress ten years ago and impelled the passage of the act was they could give relief to these people and at the same time protect the rights of credit-ors. None of us would jeopardize the rights of the creditors; but let me say to you, gentlemen, that on every occasion when these amendments have been proposed to a bankruptcy law we have found the creditors demanding the pound of flesh. They have appeared before the committee and asked that the laws be drawn tighter in order that they could more surely enforce their debts. There was no one appearing to speak for the debtor except his Representative in Congress.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. HENRY of Texas.

I have but a few moments, but I will yield if the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to ask whether or not the bank-ruptcy court under the present law has jurisdiction when a preference has not been made in assignments under the state

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have not the time to go into that question now, if the gentleman will excuse me. I am not now considering the amendments at all. It has been the creditors who have asked that the law should be made more stringent whenever any amendment has been proposed. The law has already become so odious and burdensome that it eats up the estate of any ordinary individual who must go into the bank-ruptcy court, and I maintain that the time has come when it should be repealed. It is nothing but an engine of oppression for the collection of debts. It has become a vehicle for frauds and injustices. It has served its purpose, and we should relegate the subject of insolvency and collection laws to the respective States of this Union and let them deal with them.

They are competent now to deal with them as they have ever

This law has been in existence since 1898 and is ripe for extinction. There was a hiatus of twenty years from the repeal of the law of 1867 until the present law was enacted. Why was it there was no law upon the statutes during that time? Simply because the act of 1867 had become a stench in the nostrils of the American people, as the present act is rapidly becoming, and the President of the United States sent a message to Congress urging and demanding that it be repealed because so much corruption was manifest in the bankruptcy courts.

It was promptly repealed, but shortly afterwards there came appeals to Congress for another bankruptcy law. From what sources did they come? One composing those who desired to be relieved from their debts and had no other alternative of getting from under a mountain of indebtedness. Another source, those who would make a bankruptcy law a mere machine for Those gentlemen insisted upon an inthe collection of debts. voluntary feature being placed in the law and for some months we discussed before the committee the notorious and somewhat famous Torrey bankruptcy law, which gave practically every privilege to the creditor demanded by him and denied to the debtor many rights that he could justly claim. But the Henderson bill was substituted for the Torrey bankruptcy law, and it was softened in many features. I cast my vote against the present law then for the reason that it contained severe involuntary features. If those propositions were not in there, if there were not provisions in it causing oppression of the debtor, permitting the officers of the bankruptcy courts, referees, and others to prostitute the purposes of the law, there would be no demand for its repeal on this occasion.

And, speaking in behalf of those people, in behalf of those who believe this law has been abused and has already accomplished its purposes as far as bringing relief to debtors is concerned, I desire to state my deliberate judgment that the time has come when the present bankruptcy act should be repealed and the question of insolvencies remanded to the States of the Union, where they properly belong. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell.] yield some of his time or all of it?

Mr. TIRRELL. I will inform the gentleman that I have only one more speaker on my list. He will have all the remainder of my time, and while I admit that the gentleman from Alabama should have a closing word, if he has his time divided up among several, I would suggest that he use part of it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Being the author of the pending measure and supporting it, I assume that I have the closing of debate.

Mr. TIRRELL. The gentleman certainly has. Is the gentleman's time divided up among several?

Mr. CLAYTON. I had not made that announcement; but the gentleman evidently is a mind reader. Mr. TIRRELL. I will infi that he will have the closing. I will inform the gentleman from Alabama

Mr. CLAYTON. I have seventeen minutes left, I believe, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brantley].

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to consume any time in the discussion of the proposed amendments to the bankruptcy law. So far as I am concerned, if this law is to remain permanently upon our books, I think it ought to be perfected so as to make it as wise, just, and humane a law as possible, and I am not opposed to any amendment that will tend to produce these results. As I understand these amendments, they are in the main, if not entirely, in the interest of the creditor class. They are designed to make more certain the collection of debts and to increase, if possible, the returns from the estates of insolvent debtors. So far as I am concerned, I have no fault to find with them on that ground, for if it is to be the continued policy of this great country to leave entirely to Congress the enactment of all collection laws, then I think these collection laws should be so perfected as to prohibit as far as possible the perpetration of all frauds. I am fundamentally opposed, however, to the Congress of the United States having anything to do with collection laws, and I believe that the present bankruptcy law, having degenerated into and become mere machinery for the collection of debts and not for the relief of debtors, should be repealed. I conceived it to be my duty, as it was my privilege, to vote against the enactment of this law at the time it was enacted. Before doing so, however, I voted to eliminate from it the involuntary feature contained therein.

With the elimination of the involuntary feature I was willing, as many of us who voted against it were, to enact a voluntary bankruptcy law for a limited period of time. I think I am entirely correct, Mr. Speaker, in stating that the present law would never have been enacted except for the demand of the insolvent debtors all over this great land for relief. The law was enacted primarily for their benefit. The demand to-day for the retention of the law comes not from the debtor class, but from the creditor class. The pending bill comes from the Credit Men's Associations of the country. These associations not only demand the retention of the law, but the making of it more rigid, not to help insolvent debtors, but to assist creditors. When the pending amendments are adopted, the title of the law should be changed to read "A law to make uniform all the collection laws of the United States." I am opposed to all this kind of legislation, Mr. Speaker, on principle. I do not believe it is any part of the function of the Government of the United States to regulate the manner and method of collecting debts all over this country, except in so far as may be necessary from time to time in the administration of a voluntary bankruptcy law. It is true that the Constitution vests in Congress the power "to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies," but I apprehend that the purpose of the framers of the Constitution was to provide some relief when relief became necessary to the insolvent debtors of the country, and that was the purpose of that provision.

The time must come in every country when panic and disaster overpread it, and when men throughout its breadth and length are overburdened with debt. When these times come there should be some means by which these men involved in universal distress can surrender all that they possess to their creditors and have left to them as their own their future. apprehend the men who wrote the Constitution never designed that bankruptcy laws should be for any other purpose than thus to relieve insolvent debtors. The power to grant this relief must necessarily have been lodged in Congress if the other provisions of the Constitution were to stand, for somewhere in the body of the Constitution it was written, and is written to-day, that the States are prohibited from passing any "law impairing the obligation of contracts."

Mr. Speaker, contracts are sacred things, and should be so regarded, and the framers of our Constitution were wise in providing that States should pass no laws impairing the obligation of contracts. I maintain that the true theory of our Government is that the States shall never pass any laws impairing the obligation of contracts, and that Congress shall only do so in times of great public distress

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield to a question? Mr. BRANTLEY. I have but a few moments, and I can not vield.

I believe that under the bankruptcy power of the Constitution Congress should from time to time, when conditions demand it, enact voluntary bankruptcy laws for the relief of insolvent debtors; and when that relief is accomplished the law should be repealed. It has been the uniform policy of this country from its foundation that its bankruptcy laws shall be of temporary character. The law of 1800 was repealed in 1803. The law of 1841, which did not go into effect until 1842, was repealed in 1843 by the same Congress that enacted it. The law of 1867 was repealed in 1878. The present law was enacted in 1898, and in accordance with the uniform policy of our Government the time has come to repeal it.

The only argument that has been advanced in favor of the retention of the present law, and when sifted down all the arguments come to that, is that by means of this law the credit man has all the collection laws of this country embodied in one law and can know how he stands in the business of collecting his debts, and does not have to study and know the various collec-tion laws of the different States. The argument in favor of the retention of this law is that it should be retained not as a bankruptcy law, but as a collection law. I can very well understand, Mr. Speaker, theoretically, why if I was a credit man I would favor a uniform collection law. It would seem to save me trouble. But that argument would centralize all power in the Federal Government. There are many things we can think of that theoretically it would seem to be better to have one uniform law controlling them, but this fact can not dispense with the dual system of government under which we live and under which we must live. I believe that under that dual system the matter of collecting debts, the matter of general insolvency, should be left to the States and that Congress should confine its efforts now and then to relieving the insolvent debtors of the country by a voluntary bankruptcy law.

Mr. Speaker, one insuperable objection to this law, or to any national bankruptcy law, is the fact that you can never perfect it; you can never make it satisfactory. No country in the world has ever done so. You can take the history of England for three to four hundred years, and every Parliament, almost from year to year, has been engaged in modifying, changing, or altering its bankruptcy law.

What is true of the English Parliament is true of this Congress. The present law was scarcely placed on the statute books before proposals came thick and fast to amend it. I recall that it was amended in 1903 and again in 1906, and now it is proposed further to enact a series of sweeping amendments. It must be remembered, too, that the amendments now being proposed are but a tithe of those being asked for, and when the pending bill has become a law the ink will not be dry on the statute books before there will be yet other amendments proposed. The reason for this is very simple, for the trouble in perfecting such a law as we now have is fundamental and impossible to be overcome. Any bankruptcy law that undertakes to combine the voluntary and involuntary features undertakes harmoniously to adjust and reconcile rights and privileges that are too antagonistic and too fundamentally opposed to each other to ever be harmoniously or satisfactorily adjusted. The plea of the unfortunate debtor to be released from his debts has nothing in common with the just demands of the debtor to be paid that which is due him.

Eighty years ago Senator Van Buren, at the other end of the Capitol, said, in speaking of the effort to combine the voluntary and involuntary features of bankruptcy in one law, that it is an erroneous idea that "this bill (a bill proposing such a union) can be made to serve God and Mammon by combining two things totally at variance."

Gentlemen who speak of other countries of the world as having bankruptcy laws lose sight of our dual system of government and of our dual judiciary.

Our various States, in the absence of a national bankruptcy law, have their insolvency laws, so that there is never any lack of facilities for the enforcement of contracts and the collection of debts, including the distribution of the estates of insolvent debtors. It is better that these matters should be left to States, for it is impossible in a country of the vast extent of states, for it is impossible in a country of the vast extent of ours and with all its varying conditions to have one uniform law on these subjects that will operate with fairness and justice in each separate locality.

The retention of one national law covering these subjects, such as we now have, is a constant incentive and inducement to centralize more and more power on kindred subjects in the Federal Government. The President has repeatedly urged a uniform law regulating the business of insurance. The present Commissioner of Corporations has urged upon this Congress the enactment of laws that would submit to a bureau the supervision and regulation of commercial contracts affecting interstate commerce, and bills with that purpose in view have been introduced and are now pending before us. also here submitting to bureaus and the chiefs thereof the control of the grain industry, the turpentine industry, and even the great cotton industry of the South. The Interstate Commerce Commission is having its powers and jurisdiction increased and enlarged from time to time, until the day is not distant, if present enactments continue to multiply, when the state railroad commissions will for all practical purposes be emasculated and destroyed. A halt should be called somewhere in this steady march toward complete centralization, and I am in favor of repealing the present national collection law as one step toward declaring such a halt.

I favor the repeal of the present law for another reason, and that is that it is a standing invitation to fraud and disaster. I believe that it is conducive to speculation, to immorality and dishonesty to keep permanently on our statute books a law whereby men know that they can be relieved from the obligation of their contracts. Such a law is always dangerous in these regards, and the only justification for it, as I have already stated, is in times of widespread and universal disaster, and even then its aim is not to relieve from future misfortunes, but to save from those that have already come.

The present law places no limit as to the amount a man must owe before he can seek a voluntary discharge in bankruptcy. The idea has prevailed, and perhaps prevails now to some extent, that the bankruptcy law, in its mercy and for the good of the State, was designed to relieve the overburdened debtor, the one whose condition is hopeless, the one who, staggering under mountains of debt, has no hope without such relief. Such, however, is not our law. Any person, except a corporation, having debts, our law says, may be voluntarily discharged in bank-ruptcy. The debts may be simply his grocery bills that the trusting grocer allowed him to make. They may not be large in amount. A month or two of his income may be sufficient to discharge them, but he need not pay them if he does not want to. He can go into the bankruptcy court and have them wiped Is it any wonder, therefore, under this state of facts, that the National Retail Grocers' Association asks for the repeal of the law, as witness the following letter:

THE NATIONAL RETAIL GEOCERS' ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Cleveland, Ohio, February 5, 1902.

Hon. W. G. BRANTLEY.

DEAR SIR: In justice to the retail merchants of the United States we sincerely ask you to either give the retail merchants an opportunity to be heard on the Sheriey bill to amend the bankruptcy act, 21929, before voting on it, or cast your vote against it. A bill that is so unjust to the retailer, a man who stands between thousands of people and starvation, other than as credit is extended to them by him, should not be legislated against in the manner the Sherley bill intends.

The bankruptcy act has outlived its usefulness, and should be repealed. I beg of you in all spirit of fairness to heed our petition.

Yours, truly,

JOHN A GREEN Secretary.

JOHN A. GREEN, Secretary.

The law works a hardship upon the small creditor of every class, and in the interest of the small-creditor class it should be repealed.

It should also be repealed in the interest of the large-creditor class, for the benefit they get out of it is purely theoretical and The real test, finally, as to whether or not the law is a good thing for them, is the dollars and cents that it brings to them. What do they collect under it? The report of the Attorney-General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, shows the following facts in reference to the administration of the bankruptcy law for that year.

The total number of cases of voluntary bankruptcy throughout the United States were 9,876 and the total number of involuntary were 2,003:

The total liabilities adjudicated by the courts were: Voluntary cases _____

Total liabilities ______ 120, 638, 006. 94 The total dividends realized for these immense liabilities were

as follows:

-- $3, 965, 535. 40 -- 9, 994, 338. 52 In voluntary cases_____ or dividends amounting to little more than 10 per cent. Is the law a success, even as a collection law, when it realizes for creditors but 10 per cent of their claims? I do not know a State in the Union that in the administration of its insolvency laws has not realized a larger percentage for creditors, and in the aggregate the average per cent of all the States for creditors was more than three times as great as that realized from the bankruptcy law last year.

13, 959, 873, 92 Total dividends ___.

It further appears by the Attorney-General's report that in order to realize in voluntary cases the dividends aggregating $3,965,535.40 there was expended for "fees, commissions, and expenses" the enormous sum of $1,094,877.83, and in order to realize from the involuntary cases the dividends of $9,994,338.52 there was expended for "fees, commissions, and expenses" the sum total of $2,786,813.20.

Viewing the law, therefore, purely as a collection law, who is it profiting, aside from the officials who are charged with the duty of executing it? The figures show that where creditors invoke the law one time, debtors invoke it nearly five times, and every time the debtor invokes it the creditor loses, and when the creditor invokes it he is scarcely paid for his trouble and in the aggregate receives but a pittance of his just and honest de-

Gentlemen may point as often as they please to the varying and contradictory laws of the States on insolvencies, but they can not point to such a lamentable failure on the part of the States to protect creditors as the figures I have just quoted show is the failure of the bankruptcy law.

Mr. Speaker, the discussion of a bankruptcy law is now more than a century old. All the gentlemen here are familiar with it, and I can not add to what has heretofore been so well and so repeatedly said, nor will I undertake to do so. I am content, so far as my position is concerned, to point to that interesting page in the history of our country when the bankruptcy law of 1841 was being considered, and when some time prior to its passage Mr. Clay moved to strike the involuntary feature of it, and Mr. Webster addresed the Senate in support of this motion, and on the roll call Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, and Mr. Calhoun voted together to remove the involuntary part of the pending bill. I am willing to stand with this great triumvirate of American statesmen against national involuntary bankruptcy laws. In the opinion of Mr. Justice Washington, in the case of Ogden v. Saunders (12 Wheat., 213), he gave his understanding of the meaning of bankruptcy laws.

By which laws-

He said-

I understand those laws which discharge the person and the future acquisitions of the bankrupt from his debts.

Mr. Justice Johnson, in the same case, calls them laws "for unfortunate debtors." These are my conceptions of the uniform bankruptcy laws authorized by the Constitution, and, as I said in the beginning, there are times when I am willing to see enacted voluntary bankruptcy laws for brief periods. I am opposed, however, to the permanent retention of any bankruptcy law, and I believe that the present law, for the reasons I have given, as well as for many other reasons, ought to be [Loud applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to consume the balance of his time.

Mr. TIRRELL. Do I understand you to have more than one speaker to conclude?

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, I have seven minutes more remaining.
Mr. SHERLEY. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that under the parliamentary practice of the House, while the proponent of the proposition has the right to conclude, he must do so in one speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEEKS). The Chair will state in response to the point made by the gentleman from Kentucky, that the gentleman from Alabama must use the balance of his time, seven minutes, in one speech.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, there was so much confusion in the rear of the Hall I could not hear the remarks of the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Alabama that he must use the balance of his time, seven minutes, in one speech. The gentleman from Massachusetts will use the entire time at his disposal, twenty-three minutes, before the gentleman from Alabama speaks, and inasmuch as the gentleman from Alabama is the author of the proposition, he will use the rest of his time in one speech.

Mr. CLAYTON. Under the ruling of the Chair, as I understand it—I did not hear it very well, because there was so much noise around me—I understood the Chair to rule that I must conclude in one speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. CLAYTON. I shall do that, then, of course.
Mr. TIRRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] the time which I have remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for twenty-three minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, there has always been marked diversity of opinion as to the merits of a national bankruptcy law. Much of this diversity of opinion, I am forced to believe, comes from a misconception, both of the history of bankruptcy legislation in the other commercial nations of the world and from a misconception of the existing and prior bankruptcy laws of this country.

It is true that this is a Federal Government of sovereign States, where most of the powers delegated by the people are given to the individual States, and where the Federal Government has only certain limited powers under a written Constitu-tion. But if I should be called upon to name those powers that constitute the very backbone of that Constitution, those that give to the Federal Government its vigor and strength, I should name those provisions that look to making trade conditions liquid, those provisions that seek to make uniformity of trade throughout the Nation.

I have called attention heretofore to the fact that we owe the very existence of the Constitution to the trouble that arose between Virginia and Maryland in regard to interstate commerce; and it was out of a desire to keep commerce free, to prevent the States from discriminating against one another, that the Constitution came into existence. As the result of a convention held between delegates from Virginia and Maryland, and subse-quently a convention at Annapolis, where about five States, as I recall, were represented, and where representatives of the remaining States failed to appear, the convention that adopted the Constitution was called into being.

Now, the provision in the Constitution in regard to bankruptcy does not stand alone, but it is found grouped together with those other provisions which give to the Federal Government its power over matters affecting all the people, and thereby guarantees uniformity in regard to great commercial matters and prevents discriminations between the States; and the true purpose of a bankruptcy law is not simply to give relief to the poor and honest debtor, but to assure the citizens of the entire country that in the distribution of the estates of insolvent debtors there shall be equality. Those who speak against the bankruptcy law speak in favor of the old common-law rule in favor of the diligent creditor, the midnight bringer of attachments and of executions. Against that I contend for the equity

This is not simply a question whether the bankruptcy law is perfect or imperfect, but it is a question whether the present bankruptcy law is not superior to 47 different laws of various States on the question of insolvency. [Applause.] That is the proposition for the House to consider. And gentlemen are historically mistaken when they state that those who put the bankruptcy clause into the Constitution had in mind simply the relief of debtors. I challenge any man to quote any law of any nation where a voluntary petition in bankruptcy was permitted prior to 1825; and I pause for a reply. The nearest approach to such a law prior to that is the command to the Jews found in Deuteronomy.

Now, what is the history of bankruptcy legislation in England and America? Never until 1705 did England have a provision that looked to the absolute relief of the debtor, even in involuntary proceedings, and not until 1825 was there provision for voluntary proceedings in bankruptcy. In America, not until the act of 1841 did we have a provision looking to petitions by debtors on their own volition and by which they could be relieved from their debts. And so I repeat that gentlemen are historically inaccurate when they say that the primary purpose of any bankruptcy law has been simply to give quittance to

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is it not a fact that some time in the early history of this Republic Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, then in the Senate, reported a bill to the Senate looking to the passage of a bankruptcy law for the benefit of debtors? not another fact—the gentleman challenges history—that the great constitutional lawyer, Mr. Webster, in the Senate, advocated the passage of such an act, and that it did pass the

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's statement is accurate. Those gentlemen spoke at a time that was a quarter of a century subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and it remains true that the first law that ever contained a provision in America for voluntary bankruptcy was the law of 1841.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not understand the gentleman from Kentucky to challenge my historical facts.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, much has been said about this law being simply a law promoted by creditors in the interest of creditors, and much has been sneeringly said about the various associations that stand behind it. It is true that the credit men of America favor the national bankruptcy law. It is true that the American Bar Association favors and has repeatedly favored the retention of the national bankruptcy law. It is true that the Commercial Law League has approved the national bankruptcy law. It is an old and trite argument of men unable to deal with the merits of a question to impugn the motives of those who advocate a proposition. [Applause.]

I would have more respect for the argument of gentlemen desiring to repeal the law if they dealt with the question on its merits instead of dealing simply in statements stigmatizing those who favor the bankruptcy law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will pardon me, do the creditors' association anywhere ask any preference for themselves?

Mr. SHERLEY. They do not. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible, as some men would undertake to do, to divide the world into debtor and creditor classes. The man who to-day is a creditor is to-morrow a debtor, and he may be, and frequently is, both a creditor and a debtor at the same moment. You can not thus divide mankind, and nothing is more unfortunate than to attempt to divide the men in this country into arbitrary classes such as that.

Gentlemen challenge any good that this law has done the debtor. I say to you that if it had not been for the national bankruptcy law when we had the panic a little over a year ago you would have had in its intensity a tenfold increase and its duration lengthened many, many months. Why do I say that? Because if it had not been for the national bankruptcy law every creditor in the land in that hour of doubt and distress, in that hour when men's assets were crumbling and when their credit was failing, would have gone against his debtor for fear some other creditor might precede him and by attachment or otherwise have obtained a preference, and thus eat up the whole estate. They would not have dared to wait, but knowing that under the bankruptcy law equality was assured to all creditors they could afford to wait, and did wait, on the debtor who was temporarily embarrassed, and that law served to save many and many an honest man and to keep him on his feet and prevent him from being forced into insolvency. [Applause.]

Why, in the State of Texas, in the height of that panic, the debtors of Texas, men who belonged to a branch of the same credit association that gentlemen like to rail against, petitioned through the national association stating that they had large quantities of goods on hand, that collections were difficult, and if pressed they would not be able to meet their obligations, and asked that they might be given proper time. That appeal was granted, and granted because these creditors, scattered all over the land, knew that by giving time they did not lose their rights.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.
Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman referred to the panic in Texas. Let me say to the gentleman that during the panic if it had not been for the local bankers, the wholesale men in Texas, standing by home customers, the outside creditors would have crushed many out of existence in the State of Texas. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Let me reply to the gentleman by saying that I think in the facts he has stated he is mistaken, and his conclusion is necessarily wrong because the bankruptcy law to-day does not permit the crowding out of existence of a man who does not deserve to be crowded out.

Gentlemen assume that it is possible to invoke the bankruptcy act against any debtor. It is not the fact. The gentleman from Texas is too good a lawyer to rest under that belief. There are five causes under the existing bankruptcy law by which a man can be forced into involuntary bankruptcy.

First, having transferred, sold, or removed or permitted to be sold or removed any part of his property with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors.

A man who does that ought to be proceeded against.

Second, transferred, while insolvent, any portion of his property to one or more of his creditors with intent to prefer such creditors over his other creditors; or, third, suffered or permitted, while insolvent, any creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before a sale or final disposition of any property affected by such preference vacated or discharged such preference; or, fourth made a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, or, being insolvent, applied for a receiver or trustee for his property or because of insolvency a receiver or trustee has been put in charge of his property under the laws of a State, of a Territory, or of the United States; or, fifth admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt on that ground.

And in that second case you find the meat of the opposition to the national bankruptcy law. There are certain local banks in certain communities of the country that do not like to have taken away from them the possibility of getting a midnight attachment, and getting preference over their other creditors, or to get a preference by the volition of the debtor. They are at home, on the ground, where they can seize the assets of the debtor, and the moment you prevent them doing that, the moment you require them to come into equity where a man must come with clean hands, you find them protesting.

There is another class of men that protests. Something has been said about the referees who are desirous of keeping the bankruptcy law on the statute books because of the fees they make out of it. How about the clerks of the various county courts who desire to have it repealed because of the fees they do not get out of it? If you are going to measure this question by such arguments, look at both sides of the case. And that is There is not a community where attrue also of the lawyers. tachments were permitted that did not have lawyers who made it their business and their chief stock in trade to see to the taking out of attachments by which preferences could be given to certain creditors as against others

But one of the strange arguments that is made, a wondrous argument, is that-we must not have a national bankruptcy law because it is not perfect, and because its imperfection is shown by a desire to amend it. I want some gentleman to name me a law that represents the absolute wisdom of the universe. want him to show me a statute dealing intimately with the affairs of men that is not imperfect, and that must not in the nature of things be imperfect. If gentlemen would lend them-selves to making the law more perfect instead of offering an argument for its repeal because of its imperfections, they would perform a higher service, I am compelled to believe, to their constituencies. [Applause.] Gentlemen have made the statement that all of the amendments proposed are for the benefit of the creditor class. I deny it. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brantley], for whom I have a high admiration, had thought a mount by would not have made that thought a moment, he would not have made that statement, because he is a member of the committee who reported in favor of the amendments, if the law was to be amended. amendments looks to the lessening of fees that can be charged Surely that is not in the interest of the creditor class any more than it is in the interest of every class.

The other provision provides for a composition before the adjudication of bankruptcy in order that the debtor and the creditor may get together. Surely that is not in the interests solely of the creditor class. Gentlemen owe to a great question like this accuracy of statement, and when it is charged that amendments offered here are solely in the interests of the creditor class they are making statements wide of the mark. This is true, inevitably true. When a man goes into bankruptcy, he goes there because his interest in his property, aside from his exemptions, ceases and because the interest of his creditors begins. He goes there because he has not sufficient property with which to pay his debts, and in order to be relieved of these debts the estate is to be distributed among the creditors. Anything that looks to the distribution of that estate economically is necessarily for the benefit of the creditor, and it does not hurt In point of fact, it does not hurt the insolvent debtor if the estate is wasted-mark you, I am not justifying that waste-because he gives up everything in order to get into bankruptcy, or in order to be put into bankruptcy he must be insolvent.

Now, there is another curious fact about the arguments that have been made. Some men rail against the law because it oppresses the poor debtor; other men rail against the law because it gives advantage to the bad and the dishonest debtor. time an amendment is offered looking to make it more difficult to have the dishonest debtor get this advantage of bankruptcy, we are accused of putting the screws to the honest debtor, without regard to whether it is the fact or not. It is impossible to please men of such diversity of views. In point of fact, most of the amendments offered by my bill are amendments made necessary because of diverse decisions of the various courts, because one circuit has construed language in one way and another in another, and in order to harmonize those different decisions it was necessary that legislation showing the plain intent of Congress should be had. That is the reason that these amendments are brought here; and the statement that the fact that the law needs amending is evidence that it ought to be repealed is to my mind a statement that should have weight with no thinking man. Why, how many of the laws in regard to in-solvency in the States have been amended from time to time? Is it not manifest that a law of this magnitude, covering the whole country, must of necessity be perfected from time to

And the very fact that these credit men and referees bring these amendments to us is no reason to deny the merit of the amendments if they be good ones. There are many States in the Union that make it the duty of the judiciary to suggest amendments of the law to the legislature in order that the experience of those who have actually dealt with the law in operation may be had whereby a more perfect law can be ob-Yet we are told that because men who help to administer this law come here seeking amendments we should repeal it. It is a non sequitur.

Mr. Speaker, just a word as to the objections of the Retail Association. It is curious that when an association favors the position that gentlemen take, it is perfectly proper for the men composing that association to have associated together, but when an association differs with their position, then it is a heinous crime for its members to form an association and present their common opinion. So the Retail Grocers' Association is a commendable institution because it agrees with the proponents in favor of repeal. The Credit Men's Association is not commendable because it wants to retain the law. What is the fact as to the Retail Grocers' Association? That association wanted an amendment in this bill. I personally favored the amendment, but the very gentlemen who are trying to repeal the law now are the men who prevented the amendment being brought to the House. That association wanted an amendment which should limit the bringing of vol-That association untary petitions in bankruptcy to those who owed debts greater in amount than $300, or preferably $500, because it was claimed by the association that there were certain dishonest men who ran up a lot of little debts for various groceries and then took advantage of the bankruptcy act. Against their position it was urged that the benefits of the law should not be limited to only those whose debts reached such a sum, but that the small debtor was entitled to it equally with the bigger debtor.

A fixed rule must be had, and while sometimes the abuse complained of occurs, it can only happen as to a particular debtor once in six years; no man can obtain a voluntary bankruptcy more often than that. And these men who are now opposing this bill would be sending telegrams here in favor the retention of the law if we had in it their amendment which limited the right of the man to bring a voluntary petition to cases where he owed $300 or more.

farmer, in the interest or supposed interest of those people as represented by the opponents of this law, are now excluded from the provisions in regard to involuntary bankruptcy. You can not put a wage-earner into involuntary bankruptcy. You can not put a farmer into involuntary bankruptcy, though you permit him to take the benefit of it if he sees fit so to do. Bear in mind another fact. Men's memories are short. It is easy to talk about "the good old days;" it is easy to picture the splendid condition that existed heretofore. It does not require a high order of skill to point out defects in existing affairs, but, as I have said in the beginning, the question is not simply the perfection of the present bankruptcy law, but it is a question of whether that law is not better than 47 conflicting laws of 47 separate States. [Applause.] I want men who listened to the horrors which were pictured by distinguished gentlemen as arising under the national bankruptcy law to remember the days when lawyers sat up at night working overtime in order that they might slip in an attachment and beat some other creditor to the debtor's assets. I want them to remember the day when brothers-in-law and fathers-in-law, when cousins and wives and others were favored by preference given by the debtor. I want them to think of the abuses which were common in all the various States under such conditions. I want them to think of the estates which were eaten up in contested fraudulent cases in the state courts. Oh, it is easy to magnify; it is easy to say, "Why, it now takes 10 or 20 per cent of the assets of the debtor in order to administer the law." There is no lawyer here but who knows that a lawyer, getting an ordinary claim for collec-tion, charges 10 per cent of the claim even if he does not bring a suit; and if he brings a suit, he charges much more than 10 per cent. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to answer the argument of those who favor the repeal of this law. Let me now, in conclusion, briefly state in an affirmative way some of the many reasons why I believe we should maintain a permanent bankruptcy law.

To properly do this the law must be considered as it relates to voluntary petitions-those instituted by the debtor himselfand then in its relation to proceedings brought at the instance of the creditors of a debtor.

Time was when a debtor could be thrown into prison for debt, but the enlightenment of men soon put an end to such a barbarous practice. And that same enlightenment necessarily forced the conviction that it was no more in the interest of society to destroy the usefulness of one of its members by leaving round his neck the millstone of debts that could not be paid. no matter how much he might strive to liquidate them, than it had been to actually imprison him. Such a man, bowed down by a weight that can not be lifted. subject to an attack from a creditor whenever he may make the least start toward his own uplift, presents one of the most pathetic pictures possible. Of value neither to himself, his creditors, or to society, death alone can hold out any relief. If it was true that insolvency came only as a result of wrong-doing, as was once urged by those defending the law authorizing imprisonment for debt, I could understand, even if I did not justify, a condition of society that permitted such a life handicap as a punishment. But all men know that insolvency comes more often from accident or from an inferior endowment of that talent needed in the keen competition of modern life than from actual wrongdoing. And this is so apparent that all nowadays favor at some time a law that can relieve the debtor and give him a fresh start in life, and this, under our system of government, can only be done by a national law. To my mind the justification for such a law at any time is a justification for it at all times. It is true that thereby some men may be relieved of debt who should not, but under a law properly safeguarded their number is negligible in comparison to the many who always do in justice need the law, and society as a whole is infinitely bettered. Intermittent bankruptcy laws make the right of the honest debtor to relief dependent upon the accident Nature's laws, by their eternal application, sometimes work an injury; but conceive of a society where her laws were intermittent—we should have not order, but chaos.

But, Mr. Speaker, while I believe in the voluntary features of the law, and have endeavored briefly to justify them, I desire to repeat that it was to give the Federal Government power to have uniformly administered the assets of an insolvent debtor that the bankruptcy clause was placed in the Constitution. Were it possible to have uniform and absolutely equitable insolvency laws in each State, the need of the involuntary system Another thing about the law. Men talk about its hardships. In the first place, it does not affect more than 1 per cent of the people of the country, because only about that per cent ever go into bankruptcy. Aside from that, the wage-earner and the provision is to be found in the Constitution looking to prevent this favoritism, and not the least important is that for uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy.

And that the fathers were justified in this course is amply shown by the various insolvency laws of the different States. Without a national law the foreign creditor is at the mercy of his debtor and home creditors in many of the States. terstate trade that is essential to the material welfare of our country can only be had in full measure by assuring to capital everywhere in our common country equality of treatment. Credits are dependent upon it, interest rates obey it as the needle the magnetic pole. No great commercial nation of the world but what has learned in the bitter school of experience that commerce is only possible where trade conditions are stable and uniform. Not one of these nations but what has a permanent bankruptcy law. For inasmuch as commercial failures are inseparable from commerce, there must be settlement of estates of insolvent debtors and this, if that equality which is justice is to be maintained, must be under a permanent uniform

The rich man and the rich community may, in a measure, dispense with credit; the poor man and the poor State must obtain it to prosper. To these more than to any is the law a blessing. It gives the assurance necessary to warrant capital going abroad; it makes confidence between the embarrassed debtor and his creditors possible; it enables honorable creditors to unite in help to the honest debtor, and it removes from the avaricious any motive for oppression.

Safeguard the law from abuse by amendment from time to time as experience demonstrates the need, but above all, in the interest of the people of our country wherever situated, preserve it as the best guaranty of abundant credit and trade opportunity, as an indispensable aid to that equality and justice which should be the loadstar of our endeavor. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I have offered to the pending bill, which the Clerk has just read, has for its purpose the repealing of the whole bankruptcy law instead of amending the law, which has served its usefulness and is now the subject at every session of Congress of more complaint than any other existing statute. It is worth while to note that at every session of Congress a number of bills have been introduced into the House, and some into the Senate, for the repeal of this law, which I believe is objectionable to a large majority of the American people.

This bankruptcy act has stood longer than any act of the kind in the history of the country. The first bankruptcy law existed from April 4, 1800, to December 19, 1803; the second lived from August 19, 1841, to March 3, 1843; and the third was enacted on March 2, 1867, and was repealed September 1, 1878. The present bankruptcy law was approved July 1, 1898. This law has stood, therefore, longer than any other enactment on the subject of bankruptcy.

It is evident that the American people have never favored a permanent bankruptcy system, and that they do not now favor a permanent bankruptcy law I do not doubt. Of course, the Constitution authorizes the enactment of bankruptcy law, but a law of that kind is in the nature of a public reproach, and can only be justified upon the ground that relief should be accorded unfortunate people who have suffered from unexpected reverses and such reverses that are in the nature of a widespread calamity, produced by panics or unusual and extraordinary business stringency. A bankruptcy law is not a credit to any people at any time. Such a law is, at least in some sense, a menace to the honest, conscientious, and painstaking merchant everywhere, and without regard to the magnitude of his business.

No necessity exists for the retention of this law, and I respectfully submit that it would be better to repeal it entirely than to continue it with all of its oppressive and growing abuses.

The present bankruptcy law is the most drastic and oppressive one of the kind to the unfortunate debtor that was ever enacted, and some of the amendments offered here to-day seek to make this law even more harsh than it now is. In the limited time allowed me I shall not undertake to discuss any of these particular amendments. I shall direct my efforts toward a repeal of the whole bankruptcy law rather than to amend this law, which is essentially bad and harsh in many of its provisions toward unfortunate debtors. Repeated attempts to amend the bankruptcy act of 1898 have demonstrated more and more that the advocates of that law and the supporters of the various amendments to it have all along designed and have succeeded in their idea that a bankruptcy law should have as its chief virtue severe provisions against debtors and should give the largest latitude to the creditor class to use such a law to coerce and oppress their unfortunate debtors,

It is manifest that the friends of this bankruptcy legislation have intended and desire to perfect, according to their ideas, this law into primarily and essentially a debt-collecting instrumentality. This idea ignores the beneficence of bankruptcy legislation—leaves out of consideration unfortunate persons who are unable to meet their obligations. It is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, to pursue this particular line of thought any further.

I shall not undertake, Mr. Speaker, to indulge in any academic discussion or to set forth any exposition or any elementary principles of law. I may say, however, that the framers of the Constitution never contemplated that Congress should pass any federal law for the collection of debts. The fathers wisely left it to the States to provide laws to meet by far the larger demands of civilized society.

The argument that a national bankruptcy law, with its preeminently prominent debt-collecting features, is better than the insolvency and debt-collecting laws of 47 States is the same argument advanced by the Federalists in the beginning of our Government in behalf of a strong centralized government. It is the same argument that is made now at every session of Congress by those who would take away from the States the power to regulate domestic relations. This argument is relied upon by the advocates of constitutional amendments authorizing antibigamy or antipolygamy legislation, federal laws in behalf of female suffrage, and also in behalf of various other schemes having as their object the stripping of the State of well-nigh all of its powers and centralizing nearly all powers in the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, at every session of Congress when bills are introduced to repeal the bankruptcy law the National Credit Men's Association gets busy and floods the Judiciary Com-mittee with stereotyped petitions and resolutions from every commercial body that can be influenced by that association, protesting against the repeal, and favoring the bills that are offered from time to time to make the bankruptcy law more in the interest of the creditor class and more oppressive to the debtor class. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] says that the American Bar Association and the Commercial Law League and Credit Men's Association have repeatedly law League and Credit Men's Association have repeatedly favored the retention of the bankruptcy law; but I do not the law. Speaker, with all due deference to that distinguished body of men, that this fact is any very strong argument for the retention of the law. Against the Credit Men's Association and the Commercial Law League I have put the National Retailers' Association, and I submit the following letter from that association, ciation:

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETAIL GROCERS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Cleveland, Ohio, February 5, 1909.

Hon. H. D. CLAYTON.

Hon. H. D. CLAYTON.

Dear Sir: In justice to the Retail Merchants of the United States we sincerely ask you to either give the retail merchants an opportunity to be heard on the Sherley bill, to amend the bankruptcy act, H. R. 21929, before voting on it, or cast your vote against it. A bill that is so unjust to the retailer, a man who stands between thousands of people and starvation, other than as credit is extended to them by him, should not be legislated against in the manner the Sherley bill intends. The bankruptcy act has outlived its usefulness, and should be repealed. I beg of you in all spirit of fairness to heed our petition.

Yours, truly,

JOHN A. GREEN.

JOHN A. GREEN, Secretary. Against these two commercial bodies, composed of a few men in the larger cities, I place the thousands of business men and small merchants throughout the country. These people have not asked for the retention of this law. On the contrary, they,

as a rule, demand its repeal.

The gentleman from Kentucky lays great stress upon the fact that the American Bar Association has approved the retention of the bankruptcy law. Now, who compose that association? A few eminent gentlemen, and a few not so eminent; some representing large interests, and some trying to keep company with the big lawyers representing big interests. worthy gentlemen meet at Saratoga, or some other summer resort, and discuss in the daytime, in a manner perfunctory, more or less, legal questions, and then spend some of the nighttime in devouring choice viands and drinking high-priced wines. Against this aggregation of respectable and worthy gentlemen I oppose the protests and wishes of the country lawyers, the men who know the good effects of a good law and the bad effects of a bad law upon the people generally far better than do their wealthy brothers living in luxury in the great cities. These are the men who witness the abuses of this law, sometimes by dishonest debtors taking advantage of it, but more frequently by hard-hearted and merciless creditors taking advantage of it to oppress their debtors.

I would rather take the advice of the average country lawyer than the resolutions of an association of city lawyers. country lawyer is better informed, as a rule, on the needs and wants of the people. He is closer to the common people and more in sympathy with them. He can not go to Saratoga and indulge in these choice viands and high-priced wines, but he stays at home, serves his people professionally and in public capacity when called upon, earns an honest and modest support for his family, and enjoys good, home-cooked victuals and pure

And against the resolutions adopted by the National Association of Referees in Bankruptcy in favor of the retention of this bill, an association composed of men who consume a large part of bankrupt estates, I offer the wishes of the clerks and sheriffs of the state courts.

If the retail merchants, country lawyers, clerks of courts, and sheriffs would get as busy as the associations do who are behind this bill to render more drastic the bankruptcy law the whole bankruptcy legislation would be repealed.

I am not here to question the wisdom of the enactment of a bankruptcy law in some great emergency, on account of some great and unusual occurrence that is almost, if not quite, like a national calamity. At such time, perhaps, gentlemen might justify themselves in voting for a bankruptcy law, but not in a time of profound peace and plenty; not of prosperity, as has been suggested, for we are just now about to end seven years of frenzy and uncertainty, more or less; but I hope that the 4th of March next will mark the advent of four years of peace and

These bankruptcy laws, enacted from time to time to meet great emergencies, have in each case, after repeated amendments and experimentation, been found to be better in their repeal than in their retention. They have been the source of scandal and This law is outrage in the administration of public justice. following the history of all the other laws of a similar kind.

The law first, then complaints of its defects and abuses, then amendments, then more complaints, then more amendments, and so on, until finally in every case Congress has been forced to repeal the law. So with this law—defects and abuses and complaints and amendments, so that ultimately this law must be repealed.

I urge upon the House to-day to do this good work now. Let us repeal the law by voting for the amendment for its repeal which I have had the honor to submit to your intelligent consideration.

Mr. CLAYTON. I wish I had a little more time. I was about to pronounce a eulogy on you country lawyers. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

The House divided, and there were-ayes 110, noes 142. Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 182, answered "present" 2, not voting 91, as follows:

SHERLEY

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the House will indulge me for a few minutes, I will endeavor to explain very briefly each of these proposed amendments to the existing law. I have taken of these proposed amendments to the existing law. the trouble to have placed upon the desk of each Member a statement which embodies, in as brief language as possible, the various amendments; but for fear that some Members have not read it, or that there may be something not understood by them, I shall endeavor to explain the amendments now.

There are 11 amendments, and then a provision that when the amendments take effect they shall not affect litigation then pending.

The first amendment must be considered in connection with the eighth amendment, and it is one looking to the correction of an abuse in regard to the fees allowed to receivers. In the practice there has grown up a tendency to allow receivers very large fees without regard to the actual services performed. It was attempted some years ago to remedy this, but the amendment then offered and adopted did not accomplish its purpose, and the courts seemed to be in doubt as to when the provision then adopted applied. So we have offered an amendment striking out of the existing law these words:

And allow such officers

That is, the receivers, marshals, or trusteesadditional compensation for such services, but not at a greater rate than in this act allowed trustees for similar services.

That being the first amendment. Then, in the eighth amendment there is a specific provision which limits the amount that can be allowed those receivers, to that which is now allowed to trustees, on the percentage basis, and further provides:

That before the allowance of such compensation notice of the application therefor, specifying the amount asked, shall be given to creditors in the manner indicated in section 58 of this act.

So that under the proposed change, before any allowance can be given to the receivers, the creditors must be notified. The sole object of this amendment is to protect the estate from this abuse of excessive fees

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. What amendment is that? Mr. SHERLEY. That is the eighth amendment, which must be considered with the first amendment

The second amendment relates to ancillary jurisdiction of the bankruptcy courts and seeks to reconcile some of the decisions that have been rendered in different circuits. Many of the courts hold that any district court sitting as a bankruptcy court can take ancillary jurisdiction of a suit brought in another bankruptcy court; but some of the circuits have denied this doctrine. Now, it is manifest that the assets of a bankrupt may lie in several different districts, and that in order to have a proper and economical administration any bankruptcy court should have the right to consider ancillary proceedings looking to the winding up of the estate of the bankrupt.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does that mean bankruptcy cases in the same circuit or district, or what does it mean?

Mr. SHERLEY. It means ancillary jurisdiction generally.

The gentleman will appreciate that a suit may be brought, for instance, in the bankruptcy court in Georgia, and that the assets of the bankrupt may be also in other States. Now, in order to make absolutely certain the power of a bankruptcy court in such other States to consider ancillary proceedings, this amendment is proposed, such proceedings as I have stated being for the purpose of reaching assets of the bankrupt beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Beyond the jurisdiction of the court where he is adjudged a bankrupt.

Mr. SHERLEY. So as to do away with the necessity of instituting proceedings over again. I will say to the gentleman that most of the circuits hold that that power exists, but some of them have denied it, and in order to make it uniform and beyond question, this amendment is suggested.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The Supreme Court of the United States have never passed upon the question?

Mr. SHERLEY. They have not, under this law.

Amendment 3 undertakes to make clear the designation of those corporations which can be put into bankruptcy by involuntary proceedings; in other words, by proceedings of creditors. Under the existing law an attempt was made to designate the various corporations within the provisions of the law as well as to name those corporations which were excluded. Out of that grew a great diversity of opinion among the various judges as to what sort of a corporation was embraced. For instance, one court held that a laundry corporation which laundered collars and cuffs for a shirt manufacturer exclusively could be placed in bankruptcy, while another held that a corporation which did a general laundering business could not. Now, there is no reason for such a distinction. The proposed amendment reads as follows:

Any moneyed business or commercial corporation, excepting a municipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have just been having a conversation with a gentleman from my State who represents a mining district, and he claims that that act would not include a corporation engaged in mining, but my impression was that it would.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman's constituent is clearly mistaken and that the gentleman himself is right.

Mr. PUJO. What is meant by the term "moneyed corporation?

Mr. SHERLEY. The term "moneyed corporation" is used in contradistinction to those corporations, now few in number, that exist without regard to any financial interest involved, such as eleemosynary corporations, or institutions of that character.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Fraternal organizations.
Mr. SHERLEY. Fraternal organizations that are not moneyed. The present law reads as follows:

Any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining, or mercantile pursuits.

Now the word "principally" has led to much of this confusion in the various courts, some of them holding that a corporation did come within the provisions, and some that it did not; and this change is along the line of scientific legislation. It is apparent that the proper way to legislate is to make your rule and then name your exceptions; whereas under the existing law they undertook not only to name the exceptions, but to designate in detail the corporations coming within the rule, which is always unscientific.

Mr. PUJO. I know of no such expression in law or juris-prudence as a "moneyed corporation," and I fail to understand it. Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that it is the exact language that existed in the law of 1867, and has been fully construed by the Supreme Court. Mr. HARDWICK. There are ten different propositions. it the purpose of the gentleman or those in charge of the bill to give us an opportunity to vote on those propositions separately, or must we swallow them as a whole?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that it would not be in the power of any Member to prevent a separate vote if one is desired. Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will pardon me, if we are to consider this in the House and not in Committee of the Whole, how will any gentleman be able to get a vote?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can only answer the gentleman by saying that, as I understand the rules of the House, whenever a bill is considered a separate vote can be had on any amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the gentleman is right about that, but I am afraid he is not.

Mr. SHERLEY. The fourth amendment serves, I think, to bring about quite a reform. Under the decisions of the court at present it has been held that a proposition looking to a com-position between the debtor and the creditor can not be had until after adjudication of the bankrupt.

Now, it is manifest that composition should be allowed before adjudication of the bankrupt as well as afterwards, and in point of fact where composition can be had, it is not right to force the debtor to undergo whatever stigma there may be in being adjudged a bankrupt. This permits of composition to be had prior to the adjudication instead of after the adjudication. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The former amendment excepts muni-Why that cipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporations. distinction?

Mr. SHERLEY. It was believed that municipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporations were corporations that should not be permitted to take advantage of the bankrupt act or be put into bankruptcy. That has been the distinction that has usually existed. These corporations are quasi-public corporations.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is the difference?

Mr. SHERLEY. They are quasi public with duties to the public, making them of such a character as to distinguish them from what may be properly called "private corporations.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman from Kentucky will ardon me, I want to interfere once more. The committee pardon me, I want to interfere once more. amendments, which are purely formal, of course, will be voted upon separately; but the gentleman's bill, as a whole, will be for passage, unless we have some kind of consent as to a vote on the separate propositions.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman may be right. Mr. HARDWICK. One more question. Would the gentleman be willing to separate the questions, so that we can have a vote on each one of them?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would be perfectly willing if the time permitted a final consideration of the matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. These are very important questions.
Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that they are, and the gentleman has had ample time and opportunity to study all of them.

Mr. HARDWICK. But we may not be in favor of all of them.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman also will appreciate that where a man is limited as to time in this body he has to take advantage of conditions as he finds them.

Now, the fifth amendment relates to the grounds upon which a discharge may be refused a bankrupt. It is proposed to put this language in in lieu of the language now in the law relative to the third ground:

Or obtained property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing made by him to any person for the purpose of obtaining credit, or of being communicated to the trade or to the person from whom he obtains such property on credit.

It has been held by some courts that in order to prevent a man's discharge it must be shown that the materially false statement was made to the man who actually gave the credit, and this proposed change provides that if a materially false statement is made to anyone whereby the credit is given, it shall be a sufficient bar to the bankrupt's discharge. In other words, it prevents, and in my judgment properly prevents, a who makes a materially false statement and obtains credit thereby from getting a discharge.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that the amend-ment provides that although the debtor may only have made one false statement to one creditor, that false statement shall inure to the benefit of all the creditors, and not simply to the benefit of the one who has been deprived of his goods by the false statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think that is an accurate state-The effect of the amendment is this: To hold, where a debtor makes a materially false statement, that the fact that that statement was not made to the particular creditor who advanced the credit does not make any difference. what happens commercially. Here is a mercantile agency that obtains from a man a report. Now, if a man makes a materially false statement to that agency, and it goes out over the country to his creditors, he ought not to be permitted to get his discharge. Under the existing law you have to show that the materially false statement was made to the person who gave the credit.

The language is as clear as any explanation can make it, and that language says:

Or obtained money or property on credit upon a materially false statement, in writing, made by him to any person for the purpose of obtaining credit or of being communicated to the trade or to the person from whom he obtains such property on credit.

Now, he must have obtained credit, and he must have obtained credit as a result of a false statement; but it is no longer necessary to show that the false statement was made directly to the man who gave him the credit. The immorality of the act remains just the same. If the man does make a false statement, and on that false statement obtains credit, it is an immaterial fact, to my mind, whether the false statement was made to an agency, to A, who represents B, and the credit thereby obtained, or whether it was made direct to B and the credit thereby obtained.

Take the words "in writing." Is it meant by Mr. HAMLIN. that that the writing must be signed by the party making the false statement?

Mr. SHERLEY. I presume that the fact that it was signed by him would simply be a proof that he had made it, but if he makes it in writing and does not sign it it would still hold. He must make it in writing.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understood the language of the amendment to mean that, but the gentleman used as an illustration a statement made to one of these mercantile agencies.

Mr. SHERLEY. I used it without having in mind simply a verbal statement. If this man makes a written response to a mercantile agency and in that written response makes material, false statements, and thereby obtains credit, that is sufficient cause to object to his discharge in bankruptcy.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then the amendment would not go to mean the statement given out by the mercantile agency. Of course, their statement is in writing; but, as I understand, the statement to them from the party must be in writing, signed by the bankrupt.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would not say it would have to be actually signed by him. If he makes it in writing and sends it, even if he did not sign his name to it, it would be sufficient. The signature is simply an evidence of it being his act, a proof, but not the only proof.

Now, there is in this amendment a change in the law authorizing the trustee to make objection to a discharge, but that is safeguarded by this provision:

That a trustee shall not interpose objections to a bankrupt's discharge until he shall be authorized so to do at a meeting of creditors called for that purpose.

In other words, that is to prevent a trustee of his own motion, and against the wishes of creditors, stopping a man's discharge. To object to his discharge he is required to get the right to make that objection. Heretofore he has had no right to object at all, and the result of that has been that the burden of preventing the discharge of the fraudulent debtor has fallen on some particular creditor, because there was no one who could speak for all. It is proposed to authorize the trustee to do it when the creditors in meeting so agree.

The sixth amendment is simply one to correct an omission in the former amending act. That act provided in certain subsections for concurrent jurisdiction in state and federal courts in certain classes of cases to set aside preferences and fraudulent conveyances, but in that part of the act which authorized the trustee to institute suit, by mistake, the law failed to refer to one of these subsections, and this is simply to correct what might be designated a "clerical error."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does that in any way change the jurisdiction?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not. Under existing law now there is concurrent jurisdiction in both state and federal courts, and that is clearly stated; but when the provision in regard to the trustee instituting suits referred to under these sections was amended, it was neglected to put in that additional one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. SHERLEY. The next amendment seeks to make trustees judgment creditors for the purpose of setting aside liens and preferences. It has been held in a recent decision that a trustee stood only in the shoes of some particular judgment creditor, and could bring suit only as representing him; and if there was no judgment creditor, he could not institute the suit. This puts him, as the representative of all the creditors, on the same footing as a judgment creditor, and enables him to institute these suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances, preferences, and so forth.

The eighth amendment I have already undertaken to explain. As I have stated, it must be considered in connection with the first amendment, and looks to limit the receivers' fees so as to make the maximum amount that can be paid receivers that which is now allowed trustees, which is fixed on a per centum basis, and also requires that before the allowance is made notice shall be given to the creditors so that they can object to an extreme allowance. This amendment is intended to correct one of the abuses that gentlemen have complained of to-day, of excessive costs.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The amendment fixes the maxi-

Mr. SHERLEY. It says that-

Receivers appointed pursuant to section 2 of this act shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, such commissions, not to exceed the percentages specified in this section, on moneys disbursed by them and on the value of the property turned over to the trustee, such value to be determined by the moneys realized therefrom as may be allowed by the court.

In other words, they are paid a per centum only on what is actually realized and not on a supposititious value, and that allowance is not to be given until the creditors have had notice, so that they can object. It is in the interest of cheapening the administration of the law.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.
Mr. SABATH. There is nothing in this amendment that would in any way limit the fees to the attorneys that are appointed by these receivers or trustees.

Mr. SHERLEY. I take it that this would not allow the payment of excessive fees to attorneys; that the whole purpose of it is to restrict the allowance.

Mr. HARDWICK. What would prevent it?
Mr. SHERLEY. I take it the compensation allowed the receivers carries with it the idea of compensation allowed attornevs.

Mr. SABATH. It does not. Enormous fees are being allowed to special attorneys who happen to be the favorite gen-tlemen and who are being favored by these special receivers, who happen to be also the clerks of the same courts.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that the gentleman is mistaken in assuming that this would allow those fees. If it should, it ought to be corrected, I will say to the gentleman frankly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why not correct it by an amendment of the language?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am perfectly willing to amend, if I were sure such amendment would reach the evil and not create one. I want to be perfectly fair with the House, and I have no doubt my colleagues will be equally so with me. In a law of this kind and magnitude, it is impossible for a man on his feet to carry in his head all the rulings and the actual practice under the law; and for that reason, if a gentleman suggests an amendment, I might, on first blush, be opposed to it or in favor of it; but I would not want to take the responsibility of considering it, because I am not able on my feet to look at it in all the relations it might bear. That could be done and ought to be done in a committee, and can still be done when this bill goes to the

The ninth amendment simply makes clear that before a man is given his final discharge, notice shall be given to the creditors. That is plainly, to my mind, the purpose of the existing law; but some courts have held that that was complied with by simply making a declaration in court, and not by actual notice to the creditors, and this requires that before the man gets his final discharge he shall file a list of his creditors and notice shall be given. It seems to me it is a proper amendment.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How is such a notice to be served?

Mr. SHERLEY. The amendment provides:

And to that end the court shall, before entertaining an application for dismissal, require the bankrupt to file a list under oath of all his creditors, with their addresses, and shall cause notice to be sent to all such creditors of the pendency of such application, and shall delay the hearing thereon for a reasonable time to allow all creditors and parties in interest opportunity to be heard.

It is simply providing for ordinary notice by mail communication, I should say, and it leaves it in the discretion of the court to delay the hearing a reasonable time until such creditors could be heard, if they so desired.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The notice to be sent by the

Mr. SHERLEY. It would be sent by an officer of the court. It is to prevent a creditor from taking advantage of what he knew to be a preference and a wrong against other creditors.

Mr. PUJO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. PUJO. Within what time can these suits for cancellation be instituted?

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course the gentleman knows the general law provides four months.

Mr. PUJO. The general law provides that all such transfers within four months can be annulled and set aside; but, then, there are laws of the States, in various jurisdictions, giving a What would be the effect of the adoption of much longer time. this amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. This amendment, in that particular, does not affect the present law at all. The first change it makes in the existing law is that, in order to set aside such a preference, it is no longer necessary to show that the debtor intended to give the preference. If you show that the creditor at the time he received it had reason to know that he was obtaining a preference, that fact of itself is sufficient. It eliminates the intention of the debtor, looks to the substance of the act itself, and if the creditor knew he was getting the preference, then it is set aside. Section 67, subdivision b, of the present law provides:

If a bankrupt shall have given a preference, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person. And, for the purpose of such recovery, any court of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore defined, and any state court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction.

It is now proposed to strike out the words "that it was intended thereby to give a preference" and to insert language that makes the section read as follows:

If a bankrupt shall have given a preference, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe, at the time of the entry of the judgment or at the time of the recording or registering of the transfer, where such preference is evidenced by a transfer the recording or registering of which is required, that the enforcement of such judgment or transfer would effect a preference, it shall be voldable by the trustee and he may recover the property or its value from such person; for the purpose of this provision such transfer, where recording or registering is so required, shall not be deemed complete until the date of such recording or registering. And for the purpose of such recovery any court of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore defined, and any state court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction.

Now, as I have said, the effect of this is to eliminate the intention of the debtor and require only proof that the creditor knew that he was getting the preference. The language-for the purpose of this provision such transfer, where recording or registering is so required, shall not be deemed complete until the date of such recording or registering—

Is intended to make the date of actual or constructive notice to other creditors, the date when the four months' preference period begins to run.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. The eleventh amendment seeks to cure what is apparently a very bad decision. It has been held that if a man owed a creditor a thousand dollars and he borrowed from the creditor a hundred dollars in addition, that the creditor could then take security not only for the hundred dollars, but for the thousand also, and by simply loaning an inconsequential sum he could then get security for his whole debt, which up to that time was unsecured. The change here simply provides that the lien shall be valid only to the extent of the present consideration at the time of the transaction, and has the effect of doing away with secretly giving preference.

Mr. WEBB. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the case and ask him if the decision does not hold that the debtor also was at the time he made this preference solvent. and that really there is no conflict between the decision and

As I understand that decision, it was this, Mr. SHERLEY. namely, that an old debt which was unsecured, and which could not be secured as against the operation of the bankrupt law, could become secured on the creditor loaning an additional sum and taking a lien for both sums.

Mr. WEBB. I do not understand that decision in the law. Mr. SHERLEY. The only possible effect of this amendment will be to properly limit the lien to the considerations, whatever they are, given at the time the lien is given.

Mr. WEBB. I think that is the law now and the construction of the courts also on the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall add to my remarks in the RECORD a statement from the report on the bill in further explanation of each of these amendments.

Statement relative to provisions of Sherley bill.

Sections 1 and 8. These sections should be read together. As the law originally stood there was no provision whatever regulating the compensation of receivers. These officers are frequently necessary, particularly when adjudications are contested, or when a going business must be taken in charge and conducted pending the election of a trustee. The compensation of all of the other officers in bankruptcy proceedings—that is, trustees and referees, and the clerks of the courts—is fixed by the statute itself. There being no limit to allowances to receivers, evils have grown up which seem to require legislation.

These same evils were apparent at the time of the amendatory bill in the Fifty-seventh Congress, and an effort was made to reach them by adding at the end of clause 5 of section 2 of the then law the words "and allow such officers additional compensation for such services, but not at a greater rate than in this act allowed trustees for similar services;" however, this addition being to a clause which merely authorized the business of bankrupto being to a clause which merely authorized the business of bankrupto being to a clause which merely authorized the business of bankrupts of the clause does not restricted to percentages given trustees by section 48 of the law. This addition appears accomplished by section 8 of the bill, which provides, in substance, that receivers shall never be allowed more for their prvices than trustees, and that creditors shall have notice of all applications for receivers' allowances. These changes will, therefore, make for decreased expenses of administration and remove the temptation which now exists to prolong receiverships without warraction of their district courts. (Lathrop v. Drake, 91 U. S., 516.) This doctrine, however, has not been uniformly recognized under the presentation, v. Southern Car and Foundry Company (124 Fed., 423), and other cases; for instance, those reported in 132 Fed., 697; 147 Fed., 726; and 153 Fed., 945, denying such jurisdiction; and in results of the protesses of the same and in the equally important matter of the examination of the law, both in the matter of the reson of the lill simply adds a clause to section 2 of the law conferring such ancillary jurisdiction on all district courts. Such jurisdiction; and in resource of the same contribution of the law, both in the matter of the recovery of assets outside of the district where the proceeding is pending and in the equally important matter of the examination of witnesses not within the reach of the process of the court having primary jurisdiction of the case.

Section 3. This section, in substance, su water for distribution to the water Co., 98 Fed., 711), and yet a company which gathers and buys ice for the same purpose may be so adjudged. (First National Bank v. Wyoming Insurance Co., 136 Fed., 466).

The words substituted are taken from the bankruptcy law of 1867 and their meaning has long since been settled by the courts. The reason for exempting the quasi public corporations will be apparent. Banks are excepted from the operations of the law at present. Other business are excepted from the operations of the law at present. Other business are excepted from the operations of the law at present. Other business are excepted from the operations of the law at present. Other business are excepted from the operations of the law at present of the public are now added. Section 4. Compositions can now be obtained only after an adjudication that the debtor is a bankrupt, with the resultant stigma on his name. The change in section 12 of the law which would be accomplished by this section of the bill simply makes it possible for debtors to compose with their creditors before adjudication and without such stigma; in other words, encourages settlements between debtor and creditors when a given proportion in number and amount shall have assented. Such settlements are now accomplished outside of court, and it is thought do not always result in each creditor getting the same percentage. These intracourt settlements are exceedingly popular in England, and are specifically provided for by section 3 of the English bankrupt act of 1890. (53 and 54 Vict, c. 71.)

Section 5. The bill makes three changes in subdivision "b" of section 14 of the present law. First, it provides that trustees are sufficiently parties in interest to object to a discharge. Second, that they can so object only when authorized at meetings of creditors, and, third, that false mercantile statements, if made to the trade and relied on by the creditor, shall be an available objection to the debtor's discharge. The first of these changes merely settles diff powers of a judgment creditor as against those transactions which are, by the laws of the States, declared void as to lien creditors, or for the purpose of initiating suits in the nature of creditors' bills, the intimation being that he is a judgment creditor only so far as he represents judgment creditors. This is contrary to the prevailing opinion under the law of 1867. Carried to its ultimate, the York Manufacturing Company case will, it is thought, put a premium on secret liens and give inequitable preferences to the judgment creditors of the bankrupt; in short, break down the basic rule of bankruptey administration—that is, equality between all creditors of the same class.

Hence the bill, in words added to clause 2 of subdivision "a" of section 47 of the law, confers upon trustees all the rights and powers possessed by judgment creditors holding executions duly returned unsatisfied, so far as suits to set aside preferences, fraudulent liens, or frauds per se are concerned, reference being made again to sections 60, 67, and 70 of the law.

Section 9. This change is one of practice. As the law now stands, the better opinion is that bankruptcy proceedings can not be dismissed for want of prosecution or by consent until after ten days' notice to creditors, as provided in section 58 of the law. Some courts, however, have held that a proclamation in open court is a compliance with the present section 59 g. Other courts have made rules, the effect of which is similar to the result which will be accomplished by the adoption of the amendment suggested. That there may be no question about the matter, and the practice made uniform, as well as established, in so many words, clauses have been added to section 59 g which will require notice and indicate what kind of notice is necessary when an application is made to dismiss a bankruptcy proceeding by consent or for want of prosecution. In this connection reference is made to In re Jemison Mercantile Company (112 Fed., 966); In re Plymouth Cordage Company (135 Fed., 100 cuit (Hardy v. Gray, 144 Fed., 922, 925) that the reasonable implication of the language is that the debtor must have intended the preference."

See also Loeser v. Savings, etc., Co. (148 Fed., 975); Myers v. Pipkin, etc., Co. (136 Fed., 396). So also there has been much hairspiliting as to the time when an intention to prefer, or a reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, must be proven to have existed. These decisions have suggested a redraft of subdivision "b" of section 60, which it is thought will settle these matters in the interest not merely of fair dealing between creditors of the same class, but also to make this section again harmonious with the rest of the statute.

Thus the words "that it was intended thereby to give a preference" have been stricken out, and the words "at the time of the entry of the judgment, or at the time of the recording or registering of the transfer, where such preference is evidenced by a transfer recording or registering of which is required, that the enforcement of such judgment or transfer would effect a preference," as well as the following words a little later in the section, the need of which is obvious, "for the purpose of this provision such transfer, where recording or registering is so required, shall not be deemed complete until the date of such recording or registering," have been inserted.

The effect of these changes will be, first, to make the date of actual or constructive notice to other creditors the date when the four months' preference period begins to run; and second, to obviate the necessity hereafter of showing by affirmative proof motives of the debtor to prefer the creditor, the basic test being that the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that the enforcement of his judgment or transfer will give him a preference over other creditors

Section 11. The change here merely inserts the words "to the extent of such present consideration only" after the word "shall" in the last clause of subdivision "d" of section 67 of the law. Thi

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] yield to me two minutes?

Mr. TIRRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I have here a pamphlet entitled "Proposed amendments to the national bankruptcy act as contained in H. R. 21929," to which our distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] made frequent reference during the course of his admirable remarks. I suppose this pamphlet, Mr. Speaker, was prepared by a very good lawyer, who appeared before the Judiciary Committee and presented arguments in favor of this bill in connection with the arguments also presented to the committee by the gentleman from Kenalso presented to the committee by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley]. I desire to ask that this document, which gives in one column the present law and in the parallel column the proposed amendments, together with footnotes explanatory of it, be printed in the proceedings of to-day, so that the lawyers of the country and people interested in the matter may understand just what changes in this law are made should this bill become a law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The document is as follows:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT. [New matter in italics.]

Authorize the business of bank-rupts to be conducted for limited periods by receivers, the marshals, or trustees, if necessary in the best interests of the estates.

The change here would drop from sec. 2 (5) of the law the words added by the amendatory act of 1903. The reason is explained in the comment on amendment 8 of the bill, post.

AMENDMENT 2.

Section 2, clause 19.

PRESENT LAW. [Matter in brackets elided.]

Transfer cases to other courts of bankruptcy.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT. [New matter in italics.]

Transfer cases to other courts of bankruptcy; and (20) exercise ancillary jurisdiction of persons or property outhin their respective territorial limits in aid of a receiver or trustee appointed in any bankruptcy proceeding pending in any other court of bankruptcy.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

[New matter in italics.]

[New matter in italics.]

Any natural person, except a wage-earner, or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, any unincorporated company, and any moneyed, business, or commercial corporation, except a municipal, railroad, insurance, or banking corporation, owing debts to the amount of one thousand dollars or over, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt upon default or an impartial trial, and shall be subject to the provisions and entitled to the benefits of this act.

The bankruptcy of a corporation shall not release its officers, directors, or stockholders, as such, from any liability under the laws of a State or Territory of the United States.

NOTE.

Here it is proposed to confer on district courts, by statute, ancillary jurisdiction of bankruptcy proceedings pending in any other district court. Such jurisdiction was conceded under the laws of 1867 by the decision of the Supreme Court in Lathrop vs. Drake, 91 U. S. 516, but has not been recognized by some decisions under the present act. Some courts assert it; others refuse to do so. Such refusal has resulted in much hardship, as it tends to subject assets of bankrupts which happen to be in some jurisdiction other than that of the adjudication to attachment and other state processes, and thus to the distribution of such assets among local creditors, irrespective of the rights of general creditors in the bankruptcy proceeding.

Reference is made to In re Williams, 123 Fed. 321, Ross-Mehan Foundry Co. vs. Southern Car & Foundry Co., 124 Fed. 403, In re Tybo, etc., Co., 132 Fed. 697, In re Hartz, 142 Fed. 726, Hull vs. Burr, 153 Fed. 945, denying jurisdiction; and In re Sutter Bros., 131 Fed. 654, Lawrence vs. Lowrie, 133 Fed. 995, and In re Benedict, 140 Fed. 55, asserting it.

AMENDMENT 3.

Section 4, subdivision B.

PRESENT LAW. [Matter in brackets elided.]

[Matter in brackets elided.]

Any natural person, except a wage-earner, or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil, any unincorporated company, [and any corporation engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining, or mercantile pursuits,] owing debts to the amount of one thousand dollars or over, may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt upon default or an impartial trial, and shall be subject to the provisions and entitled to the benefits of this act. [Private bankers, but not national banks or banks incorporated under state or territorial laws, may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts.]

The bankruptcy of a corporation shall not release its officers, directors, or stockholders, as such, from any liability under the laws of a State or Territory of the United States.

The changes here are intended to broaden the present law so far as it affects corporations. As that law now stands, only corporations "engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining, or mercantile pursuits" can be proceeded against by creditors. There is no good reason for these distinctions. The law, as it now stands, leads to much litigation as to what corporations are included in the enumerated classes, and thus to confusion and the wasting of assets. Some rather amazing distinctions have been made by the courts. In New York a corporation which constructs bridges and plers is liable to bankruptcy (In re Niagara Constructing Co., 127 Fed., 782), but in Virginia such a corporation is not (In re MacNicholl Construction Co., 134 Fed., 979); a hotel corporation, which also run a barroom, is amenable (In re Troy Steam Laundry Co., 132 Fed., 268), but a similar corporation, which also runs a barroom, is not (In re Chesapeake Oyster and Fish Co., 112 Fed., 960); a laundry company, which launders new shirts, collars, and cuffs for a company that manufactures them, is amenable (In re Troy Steam Laundry Co., 132 Fed., 268), but a similar company doing a general laundry business is not (In re White Star Laundry Co., 117 Fed., 570); while it has been held that a company which reservoirs and buys water for distribution to its customers can not be adjudged a bankrupt (In re N. Y. & Westchester Water Co., 98 Fed., 711), and yet a company which gathers and buys ice for the same purpose may be (1st Natl. Bank vs. Wyoming Ice Co., 136 Fed., 466).

AMENDMENT 4.

Section 12, subdivision A.

PRESENT LAW.

[Matter in brackets elided.]

A bankrupt may offer terms of composition to his creditors after, but not before, he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors and filed in court the schedule of his property and list of his creditors, required to be filed by bankrupts.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT. [New matter in italics.]

[New matter in italics.]

A bankrupt may offer, either before or after adjudication, terms of composition to his creditors after, but not before, he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors, and filed in court the schedule of his property and list of his creditors required to be filed by bankrupts. In compositions before adjudication the bankrupt shall file the required schedules, and thereupon the court shall call a meeting of creditors for the allowance of claims, examination of the bankrupt, and preservation or conduct of estates, at which meeting the judge or refere shall preside; and action upon the petition for adjudication shall be delayed until it shall be determined whether such composition shall be confirmed.

NOTE.

This section is new, but the reasons for it are convincing. Under the law of 1867, as amended in 1874, compositions could be had both before and after adjudications of bankruptcy. Now, such an adjudication, with the stigma which results, must be had before there can be a composition. Section three of the English bankruptcy act of 1890 (53 and 54 Vict. c. 71) provides for what are technically called "schemes of arrangement," and permits creditors in that country to compose with their debtors, under the supervision of the court but without an actual bankruptcy. This provision therefore stimulates official settlements, compulsory upon all creditors, when a given proportion in number and amount shall have assented. These schemes of arrangement are very common in England. Here, compositions are growing in favor, but, being held to be impossible until after an adjudication, which, in the case of involuntary bankruptcies, is often considerably delayed, are availed of much less than they should be. Hence the bill would permit official settlements between creditors and debtor immediately after the filing even of an involuntary petition, on notice and a proper investigation by the court; and thus, in effect, not only prevent the debtor being stigmatized as a bankrupt, but accomplish speedy settlements with creditors, at present rarely possible in any other way. It is thought, too, that the plan will greatly decrease the expenses of court administration, and thus both creditors and debtors be induced to avail themselves of it.

AMENDMENT 5.

Section 14, subdivision B.

PRESENT LAW. [Matter in-brackets elided.]

[Matter in-brackets elided.]

The judge shall hear the application for a discharge, and such proofs and pleas as may be made in opposition thereto by parties in interest, at such time as will give parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard and investigate the merits of the applicant unless he has (1) committed an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided; or (2) with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained; or (3) obtained property on credit [from any person] upon a materially false statement in writing made to [such] person for the purpose of obtaining [such property on] credit; or (4) at any time subsequent to the first day of the four months immediately preceding the filling of the petition transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed, or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors; or (5) in voluntary proceedings been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years; or (6) in the course of the

PROPOSED AMENDMENT. [New matter in italics.]

[New matter in italics.]

The judge shall hear the application for a discharge, and such proofs and pleas as may be made in opposition thereto by the trustee or other parties in interest, at such time as will give the trustee or parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard, and investigate the merits of the application and discharge the application and discharge the application and discharge the application and discharge the application and series provided; or (2) with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained; or (3) obtained money or property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing, made by him to any person for the purpose of obtaining credit or of being communicated to the trade or to the person from whom he obtains such property on credit; or (4) at any time subsequent to the first day of the four months immediately preceding the filling of the petition transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed or permitted to be removed, destroyed, or concealed any of his property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors; or proceedings in bankruptcy refused to obey any lawful order of or to answer any material question ap-proved by the court.

(5) in voluntary proceedings been granted a discharge in bankruptcy within six years; or (6) in the course of the proceeding in bankruptcy refused to obey any lawful order of or to answer any material question approved by the court: Provided, That a trustee shall not interpose objections to a bankrupt's discharge until he shall be authorized so to do at a meeting of creditors called for that purpose.

It is generally admitted that the law as originally passed was weak in so far as it tended to prevent the discharge of dishonest debtors. It was much strengthened by the amendments of 1903. It should be still more strengthened. First, by settling beyond peradventure that the trustee is sufficiently a party in interest to object to a discharge; second, by making the giving of a false mercantile statement in writing as a basis of credit an objection to a discharge.

As in the first: The change suggested is, perhaps, already the law (In re Levey, 133 Fed., 572), but this has been doubted. Most objections have been filed by individual creditors and asserted at their expense. If the trustee, as the representative of all of the creditors, can assert those objections, the expense can be spread over all, and thus many fraudulent bankrupts be refused discharges. Creditors are protected against an improper use of their funds by the new proviso clause at the end of the section.

As to the second: The clause which was in Judge Ray's original bill, in the 56th Congress, is suggested again. It was slightly changed in his bill in the 57th Congress, and was very much modified before the bill passed. Indeed, it is now an open question whether a false credit statement, to be available as an objection to a discharge, must not have been made to the creditor who extended the credit and at the time of the extension of such credit. To this effect is In re Allendorf, 129 Fed., 981; and, to the opposite effect, In re Dresser, 13 Am. B. R., 616 (as affirmed in 146 Fed., 383), and In re Pincus, 147 Fed., 621.

[New matter in italics.]
Suits by the trustees shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt, whose estate is being administered by such trustee, might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant, except suits for the recovery of property under section sixty, subdivision b, section sixty-seven, subdivision e, and section seventy, subdivision e.

NOTE

The change here would give effect to the last sentence of sec. 70-e of the present law. Such sentence was added by the amendatory act of 1903. The same words were then added to secs. 60-b and 67-e. To make the change effective, a corresponding change was necessary in sec. 23-b, but for some reason the words "and section seventy, subdivision e" were stricken from the amendatory bill. They should be restored, so as to make the statute consistent and obviate the controversy as to whether suits to set aside fraudulent transfers that are not technically preferences can be brought in the federal district courts (see Gregory vs. Atkinson, 127 Fed., 183, and Skewis vs. Barthell, 152 Fed., 534). (see Gregory Fed., 534). AMENDMENT 7.

Section 47, clause 2, subdivision A.

PRESENT LAW.

[Matter in brackets elided.] Collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court, and close up the estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT. [New matter in italics.]

Collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court, and close up the estate as expeditionsly as is compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest; and, for the purposes of suits specified in subdivision be of section sixty, subdivision e of section sixty, subdivision e of section seventy of said act, such trustees shall be deemed lien creditors at the time of the bankruptcy and, as such, vested with all the rights and powers possessed by judgment creditors holding executions duly returned unsatisfied.

NOTE.

One of the most important decisions of the Supreme Court under the present law is York Mfg. Co. vs. Cassell (201 U. S., 344). Carried to its extreme, this decision will, in effect, put a premium on secret liens and give inequitable preferences to the judgment creditors of the bankrupt. H. R. 15089, in the 59th Congress, was intended to meet the trend of the decisions toward the York Mfg. Co. case, and the clause in the present bill is merely a redraft of sec. 7 of that bill. Under the law of 1867, a trustee in bankruptcy was, in effect, a judgment creditor. Without some such doctrine, either recognized by the courts or enforced by the statutes, both the theoretical and practical equality among all creditors of the same class which is commanded by the other sections of the law will frequently become impossible. Hence, the bill, in so many words, confers upon trustees all of the rights and powers possessed by judgment creditors holding executions duly returned unsatisfied.

AMENDMENT 8.

Section 48, subdivision D.

PRESENT LAW. [Matter in brackets elided.] No subdivision d in present law.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT. [New matter in italics.]

[New matter in italics.]
d Receivers appointed pursuant to section two of this act shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, such commissions, not to exceed the percentages specified in this section, on moneys disbursed, by them and on the value of the property turned over to the trustee, such value to be determined by the moneys realized therefrom, as may be allowed by the courts: Provided, That before the allowance of such compensation notice of the application therefor, specifying in the amount asked, shall be given to creditors in the manner indicated in section fifty-eight of this act.

This section is taken bodily from H. R. 15089. The developing evils which led to the suggestion then have increased, rather than diminished. The original law, even after it was amended in 1903, did not in terms limit the fees of receivers, though the fees of all other officers were fixed by the statute. Receivers are often necessary; sometimes they are mere custodians and remain in possession, at most, a couple of weeks. At other times, where the adjudication is contested, they remain in possession, perhaps conducting a going business, for months. Clearly, they should receive no more for their work, no matter how long they serve, than trustees receive for similar work—that is, granting that the compensation of trustees as fixed by section 48 is sufficient. In actual practice, however, receivers are usually allowed much more. Clearly, too, those receivers who are mere custodians should receive much less than the percentages allowed to trustees for converting and distributing assets. The problem has been much discussed, and the difficulty has led to the promulgation in certain of the districts of rules intended to meet it (thus, see Rule IX, Northern District of Ill., 140 Fed., v). There is, however, no uniformity and much complaint.

After much discussion and correspondence, but without, however, feeling that by any means the ideal has been reached, the clause found in section 8 of the bill is suggested. It is, in form, an amendment of section 48 of the act, i. e., the section on the compensation of trustees, by the addition of a new subdivision. That the amendment of section 2 (5) of the law, made by the amendatory act of 1903, did not accomplish its purpose, but rather increased existing confusion, is indicated in In re Richards, 127 Fed., 772, and In re Sully, 133 Fed., 997. Hence, it is now abandoned, and the whole matter treated in this new subdivision of section 48. Such subdivision will permit the allowance to receivers whose work has been long and arduous of the same compensation as allowed to trustees;

AMENDMENT 9.

Section 59, subdivision G.

PRESENT LAW.

[Matter in brackets elided.]

A voluntary or involuntary petition shall not be dismissed by the petitioner or petitioners or for want of prosecution or by consent of parties until after notice to the creditors.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT. [New matter in italics.]

[New matter in Italics.]

A voluntary or involuntary petition shall not be dismissed by the petitioner or petitioners or for want of prosecution or by consent of parties until after notice to the creditors, and to that end the court shall, before entertaining an application for dismissal, require the bankrupt to file a list under oath of all his creditors, with their addresses, and shall cause notice to be sent to all such creditors of the pendency of such application, and shall delay the hearing thereon for a reasonable time to allow all creditors and parties in interest opportunity to be heard.

Es.

NOTE.

It is clearly the law now that involuntary petitions can not be dismissed without the regular ten-day notice to all creditors, but there is no statutory provision requiring a debtor petitioned against to file a list of his creditors, so that such notice can be given. Hence, in several of the districts, the practice has grown up of dismissing involuntary petitions on the application of the alleged bankrupt and the consent of the petitioning creditors, merely on a pro forma proclamation in court. Such practice is indicated in In re Jemison Mer. Co., 112 Fed., 966, tolerated in In re Levi, 142 Fed., 962; while the requirement of notice is flatly asserted in In re Plymouth Cordage Co., 135 Fed., 1000. The amendment suggested merely gives point to what the law now is, by providing that a list of creditors shall be filed, so that the notice may be given.

PRESENT LAW.

[Matter in brackets elided.]

transfer, where such preference is evidenced by a transfer the recording or registering of which is required, that the enforcement of such indgment or transfer would effect a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee and he may recover the property or its value from such person; for the purpose of this provision such transfer, where recording or registering is so required, shall not be deemed complete until the date of such recording or registering. And for the purpose of such recovery any court of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore defined, and any state court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction.

NOTE.

The courts continue to find holes in the sections of the law which interdict preferences. Hence, it has been thought wise to suggest that sec. 60-b of the statute be further amended to meet such recent decisions as Hardy vs. Gray, 144 Fed., 922; 1st Nat'l Bank vs. Louisville, 155 Fed., 100; Loeser vs. Savings etc. Co., 148 Fed., 975, and Meyers vs. Pipkin etc. Co., 136 Fed., 396.

The tendency of the courts, in construing the section as it now stands, is to hold that it must appear affirmatively not merely that the creditor had reasonable cause to believe he was getting a preference, but, also, that the debtor intended to give him one. This is contrary to the evident intention of the framers of the original law to eliminate intention on the part of the debtor as the supreme test, and substitute therefor reasonable cause to believe on the part of the creditor. Further, there are already a number of decisions which seem to split hairs as to the time when intention to prefer must be shown.

Hence, after considering not only the cases cited above, but numerous other decisions along similar lines, the clause found in the bill has been suggested. Its effect will be to eliminate the necessity of a showing of intent to prefer, and to substitute for such intent the effect of the act, as well as to start the four months' period running from the date of either actual or constructive notice.

AMENDMENT 11.

AMENDMENT 11.

Section 67, subdivision D.

PRESENT LAW.

[Matter in brackets elided.]

Liens given or accepted in good faith and not in contemplation of or in fraud upon this act, and for a present consideration, which have been recorded according to law, if record thereof was necessary in order to impart notice, shall to the extent of such present consideration only not be affected by this act. by this act.

NOTE

This change is intended to meet the doctrine of such cases as Coder v. Arts, 152 Fed., 941, and 1st Nat'l Bank v. Holt, 155 Fed., 100. If such decisions are the law, a creditor holding a claim of $1,000 can, on the day before the bankruptcy, loan his debtor an additional $100, taking from him collateral worth, say, $1,500, applicable to both debts, and thus secure a preference so far as the antecedent debt is concerned. This is contrary to the principles back of the statute, and, if permitted to remain the law, would make it easy for banks and merchandise creditors to secure preferences that would, in effect, nullify the law.

THE TIME WHEN THIS LAW SHALL GO INTO EFFECT.

That the provisions of this amendatory act shall not apply to bankruptcy cases pending when this act takes effect, but such cases shall be adjudicated and disposed of conformably to the provisions of said act approved July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, as amended by said act approved February fifth, nineteen hundred and three.

NOTE

This merely indicates the cases which the act shall affect, and is almost identical with section nineteen of the amendatory act of 1903.

Mr. SHERLEY. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell] I would like to offer two formal amendments relating to the print of the bill.

On page 5, line 4, after the word "prosecuted" insert the word That was simply omitted in the print. The other amendment I propose is on page 6, in line 9, after the word "specifying" strike out the word "in." It now reads "specifying in the amount asked," and it ought to read "specifying the amount asked.'

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for the amendments?

Mr. TIRRELL. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia, A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Ought not this bill to be read by sections for amendment before it is passed?

The SPEAKER. We are not operating in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Of course, if any demand is made, separate votes will come upon the amendments. These amendments, the Chair presumes, are simply to be pending.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair please, they being simply amendments looking to a correction of the print, and not substantive amendments, I would like to ask unanimous consent for them to be considered and adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the following amendments be agreed to. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I desire to know if this bill will not be read as bills usually are for amendment before it is passed?

The SPEAKER. Bills are read in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the five-minute rule. This is in the House, and subject ordinarily to the rules of the House. The gentleman can move the previous question at any time that he may choose on one or all of the amendments. is not customary in the House to read the amendments for consideration separately.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understood when the amendments were to be brought up we would have an opportunity to discuss these amendments. I may have been in error.

The SPEAKER. The special order is silent on that matter. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It was not from anything that was stated on the floor, but the gentleman who proposed them. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that two clerical amendments may be agreed to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will it be in order at this time to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the amendments to this bill? I think that was the ruling the Chair made yesterday evening.

The SPEAKER. This bill is being considered in part under the special order in the House; but in its consideration in the House, except as this special order varies the rules, the bill will be considered under the rules.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I supposed it was like the case yesterday evening, where it was moved to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration.

The SPEAKER. No. In the opinion of the Chair it would not be in order. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the two amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 4, after the word "prosecuted," insert the word "them," and on page 6, line 9, after the word "specifying," strike out the word "in."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendments will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendments were agreed to. Mr. TIRRELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about just two of these amendments. Some of them, if the law is to remain on the statute books, and the House has so decided, will tend to improve it. There are some others, I think, that from any good point of view are objectionable. I regard amendment No. 9 as one of them and amendment No. 10 as another. First, this amendment No. 9 would provide that in a case where a person was thrown into bankruptcy or a petition filed for voluntary bankruptcy, and where all the parties were entirely willing that the proceedings should be stopped, they should not terminate except upon the filing of a list of creditors, with other particulars, all under oath. Now, it might happen that the petition was filed inadvertently; it might happen that it was filed maliciously or in pique; it might happen that the person most affected was not at all a bankrupt; and yet it might embarrass such person if there could not be an end put to his troubles, even by consent, without a disclosing to everybody the state of his indebtedness, parading a complete list of his creditors and the amount of indebtedness to each. That is what this amendment No. 9 will require.

I can understand how that might be proper; and so far as I am concerned, I would have no objection to it in the case of a voluntary bankruptcy, where the man of his own motion takes the initial step toward being adjudged a bankrupt.

So far as the person who files his own petition to be adjudged a bankrupt is concerned, I would not make any particular objection to requiring that he make a list, under oath, of his creditors, their addresses, and the amount of the indebtedness to each, before the proceeding be ended. But as to the man against whom proceedings are instituted, it seems to me that it is assuming a good deal if, when those who insti-tute the proceedings and all concerned are willing to have the proceedings terminated, they shall not be terminated, and the man shall not get out of court unless he files, under oath, a
